CHARLES GRANDISON FINNEY.¹

THE readers of the Quarterly who have already had the privilege of perusing the fascinating "Memoirs of Charles G. Finney, written by Himself," will not wish to have the same story repeated at second-hand, much less will they care to have it condensed. In these Memoirs, however, we have not an autobiography of Mr. Finney, but rather, as he modestly states it, an account of the revivals of religion with which his name and labors had been connected. As might be expected, we find in it comparatively little that will aid the reader in gaining a complete idea of Mr. Finney's many-sided character. To promote revivals was his absorbing life-work, and no single portrait could more truly represent him than that which he has himself unconsciously drawn. But while he was an evangelist, and in that capacity was, as one has termed him, a "fiery John the Baptist," he was also a pastor, a college president and theological teacher, an author, a citizen widely acquainted with and constantly interested in civil affairs, an economist, skilful in the management of business, a legal adviser, a neighbor, in the sense in which our Lord applied the term to the good Samaritan, a personal friend to thousands, and especially their spiritual counsellor, and withal a faithful and tender husband and father. His biographer (if he shall ever have one) will describe him in all these and other relations, and there will be little ground left for the prejudice that has so often pronounced him to be only a narrow, intense, and bigoted religionist. Meantime a brief sketch of his life and character, based upon some measure of personal acquaintance with him and the community upon which he has left his deepest impress, may be of some service to his memory.

1. Apparently Mr. Finney owed little to ancestry or early education. His parents were irreligious; and when, in 1794, they removed from Litchfield County, Conn., to the then wild, unevangelized region of North-western New York, they were apparently taking their boy, at the tender age of two years, out of the reach of all possible Christian influences. A prayerless home, in the midst of a godless frontier community, is seemingly as unfit a place as could well be chosen for the training of one who is destined for the Christian ministry. But Mr. Finney was, by nature, unusually susceptible to moral and religious impressions; and this susceptibility must have been fostered to some extent by the Puritan notions which came with the family from their New England home. His mother's disapproval of the recklessness of the people about them, though not very outspoken or positive, was one of his earliest recollections.

Froude says that "whatever exists at this moment in England and Scotland of conscientious fear of doing evil, is the remnant of the convictions which were branded by the Calvinists into the people's hearts." The Calvinistic pulpits of New England, during the last and the preceding century, produced a like effect upon the American people. There may have been, relatively to the population, fewer professors of religion in New England a hundred years ago than to-day, but there was, in the popular conscience, a profounder fear of divine justice. The Puritan idea of law and penalty went with the New England emigrants to their frontier settlements, even when the ministry and the church were left behind.

The moral fibre in Mr. Finney's early character must be traced to this, or else to his natural constitution, rather than to any religious training that he received, either at home or in the church. He says that when he began to study law, at the age of twenty-five, he was "almost as ignorant of religion as a heathen." Up to that time he had never sat stately under the preaching of an educated ministry, although he had spent four years as student and school-teacher in New Jersey and Connecticut. In his old age he used often to refer to the paucity of his early opportunities, regretting especially that from a child he had not "known the Holy Scriptures." But it is a remarkable fact, which he has not thought worthy of notice, that in spite of his lack of religious advantages, he never became reckless or vicious. As a young man, he was spirited and, no doubt, sometimes rough and hilarious; but, considering his associations, he was exceptionally conscientious and high-minded. This must have been due mainly to the strong hold which moral ideas always had upon him. He "shewed the work of the law written in his heart." He was thus naturally adapted to legal studies; and these studies, specially as he pursued them, were eminently fitted to quicken his natural discernment of moral truth. He says:

"In studying elementary law, I found the old authors frequently quoting the Scriptures, and referring especially to the Mosaic Institutes as authority for many of the great principles of common law. This excited my curiosity so much that I went and purchased a Bible, the first I had ever owned; and whenever I found a reference to it by the law authors, I turned to the passage and consulted it in its connection. This soon led to my taking a new interest in the Bible, and I read and meditated upon it much more than I had ever done before in my life."¹

This interesting leaf from his history shows not only how thorough he was inclined to be as a student, and thus explains his intellectual power, but it also brings to light the process of providential training by which he was made ready for the remarkable experience which accompanied his conversion. The study of law was to him at the same time the study of the divine government. His naturally quick sense of right and wrong was deepened by meditation upon the righteousness of God. When under the guidance of the Spirit "he came to himself," there was something in himself to come to.

Late in life President Finney often recalled the wonderful freshness with which during these years the truths of the Bible came to his mind. There was, he thought, some compensation in this for his lack of earlier familiarity with it. It was a new book to him, and for this reason all the more suggestive and stimulating; besides, he was untrammelled by traditional interpretations. He had the privilege—in one point of view it certainly was a privilege—of finding out for himself what the Bible taught concerning sin and redemption. Unquestionable as are the advantages of early religious culture in the midst of a Christian community, it is not unlikely that it is well for the world that Mr. Finney was trained as he was. What he would have been if he had been brought up in Connecticut by pious parents, and by them had been sent to Yale College, no one can tell; but however distinguished he might have been, he would probably not have been fitted for the particular work for which God so evidently girded him. For a special mission there is need of special training.

2. Christian biography contains nothing that is more remarkable than the story which Mr. Finney has given of his own conversion. He had been for some time convinced of the truth of the Bible, and had given it special study; he had frequently attended the prayer-meetings of the church, and had speculated not a little upon the genuineness of the prayers to which he listened; he had disputed with the minister, whose preaching, being of the old-school type, did not, in his independent judgment, harmonize with reason or the Scriptures. He was not a blasphemer or persecutor; but he was, at least, a merciless critic of the disciples of Christ. All the while the Holy Spirit was bringing the truth, with which he was becoming so familiar, home to his heart. Conviction seized him, and, as if he were an arrested criminal, he was brought face to face with his Judge. His fierce struggle with his pride; his efforts to pray; his temporary abandonment of business that he might concentrate his whole mind upon the great question of his salvation; the inward voice that stopped him on the street, and the sudden illumination which made the way of salvation so simple and so clear; his retirement to the seclusion of a wood, and the revelation then made of the pride and obstinacy of his wicked heart; his humiliation and confession, and the desperate grasp with which he laid hold of the promises of God; the peace that followed his conscious justification; the subsequent vision of the Saviour and the wonderful baptism of the Spirit, which seemed to him "like wave upon wave of liquid love,"—all these and other similar experiences Mr. Finney describes with a particularity almost too minute. The impression may be left on some minds that the principal evidence of his regeneration lay in the wonderful sensations that accompanied it rather than in the changed character which was produced by it. It would not be strange if many should enviously wish that they might be converted in a way similarly brilliant and miraculous, although, through lack of the same deep, emotional nature which characterized Mr. Finney, they are, perhaps, as incapable of such an experience as is anthracite of sudden combustion.

Mr. Finney, as his "Memoirs" show, was deeply impressed by the remarkable experiences which attended his conversion and the subsequent crises of his religious life. He, no doubt, regarded them rightly as evident tokens of the Spirit's presence and power. But for his active, rational instinct and his well-trained, metaphysical judgment he might have become visionary. As it was, he was far enough from adopting anything like fanatical views of the nature of religion. To be a Christian, in his view, is to love God; and the love of God is the cheerful and affectionate surrender of the will to His service,—this and nothing more. The evidence to him of his conversion was not his visions and sensations, but the utter and radical change of his supreme and governing purpose, and his conscious trust in Christ.

3. Like the converted Saul of Tarsus, Mr. Finney, after his conversion, “immediately preached Christ that He is the Son of God.” “I have a retainer from the Lord Jesus Christ to plead His cause, and I cannot plead yours,” was his answer to the client who, on the morning after the light had shone upon him, came to remind him of the approach of the hour fixed for a pending trial. The profession of the law, of which he was devotedly fond, was at once and forever abandoned. It suddenly lost all its attractiveness. From that day, his life was devoted to the advocacy of the claims of the gospel. He began at once to beseech his friends and neighbors, everywhere, on the street, at their homes, in the public meeting, to be reconciled to God, with a power not unlike that of the apostles in Pentecostal times.

But he did not enter upon the full duties of the ministry without suitable training. The legal profession had already furnished a considerable part of the requisite preparatory discipline. His thorough study of elementary law in connection with the Bible had made him familiar with the ethics of theology. He had, besides, in the handling of cases gained the power of analysis, of argumentation, and appeal, all which are as needful in the pulpit as at the bar; and, specially, he had already learned how to address men. He had studied the art of persuasion while facing juries. All his legal skill was converted, when he was converted, to the higher end of preaching; and none who ever heard him preach could have failed to see that he owed much of his success to the free use which he made in the pulpit of the argumentative, conversational, direct, persuasive mode of address which he had cultivated at the bar.

To this previous discipline he afterwards added a kind of theological course. Whether his old-school pastor (Rev. Mr. Gale), to whose care the Presbytery had committed him as a candidate for the ministry, was his teacher or his pupil, it may be difficult to say. He seems to have served the purpose of whetstone to the knife. The knife was sharpened by the collision and the whetstone was worn away : Mr. Gale afterwards accepted Mr. Finney's theology.

With the original languages of the Bible, this student of divinity was not then familiar, and to questions of scholarly criticism he gave little or no attention ; but the English Bible, as containing a system of belief intelligible to the common mind, he studied with a personal application as devout and earnest as ever characterized commentator or theologian. He studied it at times literally on his knees. Out of such study as this came his theological system, which in the earliest years of his ministry was accurately and clearly defined.

No doubt he was specially endued with power from on high by the baptism of the Holy Ghost ; but it was, after all, his remarkable natural gifts, cultivated by several years of legal study and practice and afterwards concentrated upon the study of the Scriptures, that God baptized and sanctified. Little countenance does his example give to the theory that the young man who is willing to place implicit reliance on the guidance and inspiration of the Holy Spirit may safely omit a theological course, and, without any patient self-culture, enter at once upon his work. No doubt God may sometimes choose "the weak things of this world to confound those things which are mighty ;" but it is quite certain that laziness will never be "endued with power from on high."

Mr. Finney's "Remarks on Ministerial Education," in the seventh chapter of his "Autobiography," set forth quite fully his idea of preaching and of the preparation necessary for it. A racier discussion of this much-belabored topic can scarcely be found. Its value, however, consists more in its frank revealing of his own methods than in the general practicability and usefulness of his recommendations. Every great preacher is apt to recommend his own way with great positiveness. Doubtless it is best for him ; but the variety and contradictoriness of the homiletic theories of different men, each distinguished in his way, remind us that there is no single pattern that will fit all alike, and that ministerial striplings will be hindered rather than helped by being arrayed in the garments of some giant preacher. Still with due allowance for Mr. Finney's natural partiality for his own methods, this chapter will be greatly serviceable to the young preacher who is trying to find the best way to prepare and deliver his sermons.

Whether in the pulpit Mr. Finney realized his own ideal must be left to the judgment of his stated hearers. One of these, who is specially qualified for the task,¹ has given the following remarkably faithful and complete portrait of him as a preacher, from which nothing can be spared and to which nothing need be added;—except a reminder that his sermons, which were never written, were preached from skeletons:—

“He received his gospel as the word of God communicated to his mind by the illumination of the Spirit. Thus he went forth to his work as a preacher with the full conviction that he had a message from God for men; and this conviction was strong upon him during the fifty years of his public life and labor.

“This persuasion ruled in his soul and shaped his thought and his work. Probably no sermon of his ever made the impression that he had wrought upon it as a work of art, although the spirit of his work was that of the truest art. His aim was to bring the truth home to men in such forms as to control their thoughts and move their hearts and decide their action. To this end the truth itself was put foremost, and form and embellishment were made wholly subordinate. His own clear apprehension of the truth enabled him to give his doctrine such a statement that it would be accepted as self-evidently true. Thus he taught as one having authority, who had a right to require assent to his message; and few men ever commanded a wider assent to their doctrines.

“The manner of his discourse was simple, direct and conversational, at the opening. Beginning with the simplest propositions, defining carefully the idea he was to present, telling first what it was not and then what it was, he advanced to the profounder views of his discourse, and thus gradually paved the way to a powerful appeal to the hearts and consciences of his hearers. In the days of his full strength, his principal discourse upon the Sabbath seldom fell short of an hour and a half in length, and often extended to two hours; and to the end of his days, he rarely preached less than an hour. The modern demand for short sermons found no sympathy with him. Perhaps this view sometimes prevailed in his audience. It seemed at times that the first half hour devoted to laying the foundation might profitably have been saved by assuming that his hearers in general apprehended and accepted the elementary truths with which he introduced his discourse ; but it was probably true that he could not give us the last without the first. By these simple steps he gradually rose to the heights of his theme, and it was very rare that the view from those heights did not compensate for the patient climbing. As the great truths kindled upon his imagination and his heart, the whole intensity of his nature was aroused, and he poured out upon his audience a fervid torrent of argument, expostulation, and entreaty. The general impression of his sermons was that of intense solemnity and earnestness and yearning love. However stern and awful even the presentation of the truth might be, no one ever could mistake the compassionate love that often choked the utterance and bathed the face with tears. If at times he seemed to take his place with God, and stand almost as the herald of His indignation against sin and the sinner, he never failed to illustrate the divine compassion which would rescue the sinner from his ruin.

"He had rare power in touching the consciences of men. However plausible and comely or concealed a worldly character might be, under his steady hand the adornments and disguises fell away, and sin and all forgetfulness and neglect of God appeared in their intrinsic hideousness. To him sin in its own nature was mean and vile, however amiable or graceful the form it might take, and respectable sinners as well as others felt his searching appeals.

"But with all his solemnity and intensity of earnestness, his discourses were often relieved with bursts of humor, which diffused themselves over the assembly in a rippling smile. Such a response seemed never to disturb him nor to detract from the solemn impression. The next response would be breathless silence and tears."

4. From the first, President Finney had a clearly-defined theological system, and the main object of his preaching was to state and enforce the truths of this system. He may be fitly called a pulpit theologian.

To those who cherish the common notion that theological doctrines cannot be made popular in the pulpit, it will always seem strange that such preaching as his, involving largely the same logical forms of statement that belong to the divinity lecture, should have been so acceptable and even fascinating to the common people. The wonder increases when it is remembered that he never attempted to mollify the sterner doctrines. When he preached on the text, "The carnal mind is enmity against God," he would not hesitate to say : 1. Men in their natural state do not love God. 2. All men in their natural state hate God. 3. All men in their natural state hate God with a perfect hatred. 4. Their hatred of God is such that, if they could, they would drive Him from His throne. He certainly was never hindered by popular prejudice from declaring what he believed to be "the whole counsel of God." And yet the people thronged to hear him. The explanation will be sought for by some in his free, extemporaneous, lawyer-like mode of delivery, his piercing, eagle eye, his clear, ringing voice, his skill in illustration, his dramatic power, his earnestness, his direct personal appeals. No doubt he was aided by all these and other rhetorical helps; but they were only as feathers to the arrow. It was the keen point of the truth which his hearers felt. Whether Mr. Finney, like Whitefield, could have made any one weep by the pathos with which he could utter the word "Mesopotamia," it is of little consequence to know. Whenever his hearers did weep, it was because he made them feel the power of divine truth. By clearness of statement, by argument and appeal, he brought his hearers face to face with the eternal verities of God's word. Herein principally lay his power in the pulpit. He reasoned mightily out of the Scriptures.

His theological system was the result of the practical application of truth to the hearts and consciences of men. If at any point this system is defective or false, it is not because he did not pursue the right method of investigation; for there can be no doubt that he is most likely to find the truth who studies the Scriptures, not in some cloistered retreat, but in the field of active evangelical labor.

Before Mr. Finney came to Oberlin he was strongly inclined to the work of theological instruction. When the old Broadway Tabernacle in New York was erected, a theological lecture-room was fitted up for his use, but he did not know that his students were in Cincinnati, and that he was to meet them in the midst of the forests of Northern Ohio. The theological department of Oberlin College came into being when he and his future associate, Prof. John Morgan, reached Oberlin together, in the spring of 1835, and there met the young men who had left Lane Seminary on being prohibited by the trustees of that seminary from discussing the evils of slavery.

What kind of a teacher he became may best be told by those who, either as associates or pupils, knew him best. In the opinion of Dr. Morgan, he was "admirably adapted to be an instructor in theology, though his mind went with such a rush that perhaps at times he failed in patience with the young men. He was careful that his pupils should not accept his teaching without seeing for themselves that it was the truth. Sometimes the young men would swarm around him like bees, discussing some point with him; and then he would take up the subject and think it over anew, and would prepare a series of lectures remarkable for clearness and grasp of thought."¹

He secured the deference of his students, as every successful theological teacher must, by showing that he had confidence in his own intuitive convictions and logical processes. In argument, he moved with a firm tread. Some who have observed this characteristic have made haste to pronounce him "self-conceited." But the members of one of his classes have not forgotten the scene when, on one occasion, being plied with difficult questions, he became overwhelmed with a sense of his ignorance, and burying his face in his hands exclaimed, weeping, "I, a theological professor, and yet how little I know!"

Pres. Fairchild says that "his method of instruction was to draw out his pupils in inquiry and discussion, and thus establish in them the power and the habit of independent thought. All his own views, as well as those of his pupils, were subjected to this ordeal, and it was no rare thing for him to re-adjust his doctrinal statement to meet the new light which he thus obtained. It was vain to bring against his better view some former argument or statement of his own. He would smilingly reply to any such suggestion, 'Well, I don't agree with Finney on that point.' It was his aim to be right rather than consistent; but his interest in philosophical truth was always subordinate to his great aim of bringing human souls to God; and thus his great anxiety in reference to his pupils always was that the gospel should possess their hearts and shape their lives. "No member of his class was in doubt that this was the burden of his soul. In certain portions of his yearly course, he took special pains to give his instruction a practical turn, so that every pupil should be brought up to a higher Christian experience."²

One of his pupils (Rev. Leonard S. Parker) recalls his lectures as being "not bare skeletons of truth," but as being "infused with the force and beauty of real life." "When he presented the subject of the atonement, for example, so vividly was the great love of the Godhead made to appear to our minds that we found ourselves in tears, at times, with our pencils in our motionless hands."

The intensity of his interest in the spiritual preparation of his students for the work of the ministry was once exhibited in an exceedingly impressive way. The scene is thus described by Mr. Parker: "The storm of suspicion and detraction, carrying with it so many of his old friends, and converts even, was at its height, and our class was soon to go out and bear its fury. We knelt as usual, Mr. Finney leading in prayer. At first there was nothing uncommon in his manner and words, but soon the great deep of his heart was broken up, and he poured out a mighty stream of supplication, — for us, for his former co-laborers, for those whom he had won to Christ, for the ministry, for the church bought with Jesus' blood, for a lost world. Sometimes he seemed to be leading us, again he seemed to be alone with God. We thought of Jacob wrestling with the angel at Peniel; of Moses, seeking to be blotted out of God's book; of Paul, asking to be accursed from Christ, for Israel; of Luther, pleading with God the night before the Great Diet. We remained on our knees a whole hour, then rose and went silently to our rooms."

The warmth of Mr. Finney's interest in the spiritual condition of these young men just entering the ministry was no doubt greatly promoted by his continuance in pulpit labors while teaching. Nearly every Sabbath, in term time, he preached once at least to his immense audience of students and citizens, and no year passed, and rarely a term, without such an interest as resulted in many conversions. The long winter vacations he commonly spent in evangelistic labors elsewhere. Thus he was continually using in the pulpit the truths he handled in the lecture-room, and they were consequently always in fusion. They did not have time to become cold. His theological system, therefore, retained the same practical features, the same adaptation to pulpit uses, that characterized it at first.

His theological lectures, published first in this country, were republished with additions in England. A graduate of the Oberlin Theological School, and a careful student of Pres. Finney's works,¹ thus ably summarizes his doctrinal system.

1. The human will is self-determining in its action.
2. Obligation is limited by ability.
3. All virtuous choice terminates upon the good of beings, and, in the ultimate analysis, on the good of being in general.
4. The will is never divided in its action, but with whatever momentum it has at each instant, it is either wholly virtuous or wholly sinful.

With regard to total depravity, he accepts it as a Biblical doctrine, that all the acts of men since the fall, and previous to regeneration, are sinful.

Regeneration and conversion are treated as synonymous terms, descriptive of a coetaneous act both of the Holy Spirit and of the human will. He is content to accept the facts and let alone the mystery; insisting, however, that the human reason is always so far respected that the truth is in all cases the instrument through which conversion is secured by the Spirit.

The condition into which men are brought by regeneration is either that of continued holiness, increasing in volume, or of states alternating from entire holiness to entire sinfulness; the former state finally predominating, and ending, according to the ordinary Calvinistic doctrine of perseverance, in everlasting salvation. The final perseverance of the saints is accepted as a revealed truth, which the reason cannot contradict, and whose mysteries are left with the Lord.

Likewise, the doctrine of election is maintained as being, in the wisdom of God, our only assurance that the salvation of any will be secured. There is a plan of salvation whose means and ends were chosen from eternity, and which is now unfolding before us.

In this plan Christ is the central figure, — a being who is both God and man, and whose humiliation and sufferings are a governmental substitute for the punishment of those who are sanctified through faith in His name. The atonement satisfies the demands of general justice, and its provisions are freely offered to all men. Almost all the statements we have here given would be accepted by what are called New School Calvinists.

The exceptions would relate to the nature of virtue so far as concerns the ground of obligation, the simplicity of moral action, and the process of sanctification.

So far, however, as relates to the nature of holiness, Pres. Finney's system is the first cousin, if not the grandson, of that of Pres. Edwards the elder. The Oberlin student finds himself very much at home in Dr. Samuel Hopkins' "Inquiry into the Nature of True Holiness," which is scarcely more than a development of the Edwardian theory of virtue.

In Pres. Finney's theory of virtue, especially in his statement of the simplicity of moral action, he is sometimes accused of rationalism, while in his doctrine of sanctification he is liable to the charge of mysticism. His theory that each act of the will is wholly right or altogether wrong gives him this advantage, that he can interpret in an absolute manner the command to "love God with all the heart." At the same time the ground of hope that we shall attain actual stability and constancy in holy exercises of the heart is open for discussion on independent principles.

The questions concerning the assurance we may have of a state of entire, i. e., continuous sanctification in this life, and, if attainable, the methods by which it may be obtained, fall into the same category with those concerning perseverance of the saints and security in our heavenly estate. The maxim upon this point, deducible from this theory of simplicity in the action of the will, is, "Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof." His exhortation with regard to sanctification is really nothing more than this: Give perfect obedience now to the will of God; fill your minds to their utmost present capacity with the persuasive knowledge of Christ; open your hearts in the fullest manner to the present work of the Holy Spirit. This may keep you for the future, but our duty is always with the present. The large space in his systematic theology which Pres. Finney has devoted to the offices of Christ in securing our sanctification, will always remain classic passages upon that subject, and wherever they are known will be valued most highly by the most devout in the Christian church. No one is more ready than he to exalt Christ and crown Him Lord of all.¹

5. The leading traits of Mr. Finney's character have already been indicated in what has been said of him as a preacher and theological teacher. His sermons, especially, reflected his religious experiences as well as his views. It was partly because he threw himself so entirely into his utterances that he was so irresistible in the pulpit. Of his theological system, Dr. Hodge says, in the opening of his review of Finney's Lectures on Theology, "It is to a degree very unusual an original work; it is the product of the author's own mind. . . . The conclusions presented have been all wrought out by himself and for himself." For this reason, we are expected to infer that the system is very defective; but there are many who will draw a different inference, greatly to the credit of the author's mind and heart.

As regards his intellectual qualities, it should be noted that he was unusually endowed with what the philosophers call "sense-perception." He perceived quickly through every sense and felt what he perceived. His ear was most delicately attuned; sweet music thrilled him, harsh notes and discords were torture. He had an eye that seemed to look not so much at as through whatever he saw; he could take in at a glance the position and relation of objects or events. If his education had favored it, he might have been an artist. In his childhood he exhibited a love of neatness and a delicacy of taste quite out of harmony with the roughness of his surroundings; and although he abominated the glitter and display of fashionable life, he was always sensitive to real beauty, whether of form or color.

This natural love of the beautiful he never purposely cultivated. Indeed, he sometimes seemed to treat it as one of the "lusts of the eye" that must be crucified. He was always afraid that too much attention would be paid to the "outward adorning" and too little to the "ornament of a meek and quiet spirit." Sometimes he rebuked indiscreetly those who had quite innocently gratified their taste, and thus left the impression that he lacked the æsthetic faculty, and charity besides; but those who knew him best saw that in such criticism he greatly misrepresented himself. In the more quiet and meditative period of his old age, he gave these sentiments fuller play. He specially admired fine architecture, and the goodly proportions of the new Theological Hall in Oberlin, which he watched from his study-window while it was building, gave him special enjoyment. Late in life, he related to a friend in glowing terms a vision which God gave him in a dream of a glorious temple, so magnificent and at the same time so exquisitely harmonious in its proportions as to thrill him with emotions like those produced by the sweetest music. But those who have listened to the impassioned eloquence of his most powerful sermons will not need to be assured by such indications as these that he was liberally endowed with a sense of the beautiful and the sublime.

He had a vivid imagination, which often served him in the pulpit. He could graphically reproduce or create illustrative scenes, and then add life to them by dramatic touches as exquisitely apt as they were unconscious. At one time his audience would be melted to tears by his description of the return of the prodigal son; at another time they would shudder at his portrayal of the probable experiences of the lost soul. His hearers were accustomed to say, "Mr. Finney makes us almost see into the eternal world."

But his imaginative power was more than over-balanced by his truthfulness in dealing with the affairs of every-day life. He could sift evidence like a skilful lawyer; and when he had thus eliminated the element of improbability from a mixed or exaggerated story, he could easily bring to light the simple, naked truth. If, however, a question of injury or abuse were to be settled, he needed to hear both sides. His sympathy with the apparently wronged party was so quick as to incline him to give a partial verdict; but when the evidence was all in, his decision would be judicially fair. He certainly placed high value upon historic accuracy. His autobiography shows both his disposition and ability to write a truthful narrative.

He might have been a good historian, but he was better adapted to philosophical investigation, and was interested more in metaphysical, than in physical truths. He had in a high degree that faculty which is most essential to the metaphysician, — clear intuition.

He was certain of the first principles of morals and theology. They were necessary truths, which he could no more doubt than the fact of his own existence. Thus he laid a solid foundation for his theological system. The superstructure was built up by the processes of logic. Few men have exhibited greater power as reasoners. Dr. Hodge says that he "begins with certain postulates, or what he calls first truths of reason, and these he traces out with singular clearness and strength to their legitimate conclusions. We do not see that there is a break or a defective link in the whole chain. If you grant his principles, you have already granted his conclusions." Of course Dr. Hodge easily escapes from his conclusions by refusing to accept his premises, but without intending it, he gives Mr. Finney very high commendation; for the theologian, who, upon the first truths of reason can build arguments in which even a hostile critic cannot find a flaw, is entitled to more than usual respect.

But the mental quality which was most marked in him was energy. It was this that gave him the immediate mastery of the most intelligent audiences. The special invitation which, in 1842, he received from the lawyers of Rochester, to give them a course of lectures on the divine moral government, shows his power to attract and impress a class of men who are usually least inclined to attend upon the preaching of revivalists. It was this energy which toned his style. His published writings generally lack literary finish, but there is still a certain raciness in them that renders them exceedingly attractive and readable. His chief fault was lengthiness. If he had given more study to the laws of rhetoric and had applied them critically to his own style, he might have lost somewhat of his force and freedom of expression, but he would have rendered his theological writings, specially, more permanently useful.

Underneath his vigorous intellectual qualities there lay an immense moral power. His conscience was the supreme and controlling faculty of his soul. His moral perception was such as to give him an almost overwhelming sense of divine holiness. His friends who communed with him and heard him give expression to his idea of God were often reminded of Isaiah, who "saw the Lord upon His throne, high and lifted up," and heard the seraphims cry, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts!" It was this deep sense of the purity of God that gave him such an appreciation of the exceeding sinfulness of sin. The Biblical passages which speak of God as being "pleased" or "displeased" with the moral conduct of men, he did not explain away by applying the theory of anthropomorphism. He regarded God as really and delicately sensitive, infinitely so, to sin.

The chief power of his preaching is due to the emphasis with which he insisted upon the righteousness of the divine law and the terrible guilt of disobeying it. He preached to men's consciences. He sought to discover the secret motives and to make men sincere and honest before God. He gave no one the comfort of a Christian hope if he were not willing to confess and forsake every sinful deed and habit of which he was conscious.

To produce conviction he would point out specific sins, sometimes with such minuteness and accuracy of description as to make his hearers wonder how Mr. Finney had found out their secrets. It is related that after describing the unchristian behaviour of some men in their homes, he said, "I could call the names of some of you who have this morning been guilty of just such conduct." "Call me!" was the audible answer which came back from a convicted hearer. A boy who, while at church, had in his pocket some vile book that he had been clandestinely reading was sure from the way Mr. Finney preached that his guilty secret was known, and on going home confessed it, to the astonishment of his parents. Sometimes he would plainly mention from the pulpit some act of mischief or crime that had been committed, and would so characterize it as to make the guilty author of it feel that there was no hope for him but in confession. On one occasion, in his Oberlin pulpit, he was moved to mention in his prayer a specific case of theft. The answer to his prayer came the next morning, in a call from the man who committed the crime and who came for the purpose of making a confession. It used to be a common remark, that no police or detectives were necessary in Oberlin so long as Mr. Finney occupied the pulpit.

It is well-known that some of his most searching sermons in the large cities were followed by numerous confessions of thefts and other crimes that had long been successfully concealed. Stolen money and goods were restored by clerks to their employers, outlawed debts were paid, and hidden crimes were confessed, as the direct result of his pungent application of the simple truth.

A ludicrous incident once occurred, which strikingly confirms this characteristic of Mr. Finney's early evangelistic work: After one of his preaching services in Boston, many years ago, an inquiry meeting was held, conducted by a layman.¹ In the course of the meeting, the leader observed a man bringing in another, who, evidently, was reluctant to enter. Having drawn him, by a persuasion that was more physical than moral, to the front seat, he left him and went back himself to a seat near the door. Supposing the case to be peculiar and urgent, the leader at once approached him and tried to ascertain his state of mind. To his surprise, he found the man utterly indifferent, and scarcely aware of the nature of the meeting. Puzzled by the strangeness of his manner, he went to the person who had brought him in and asked him whether as a Christian, interested in the salvation of his friend, he had persuaded him to come. He said that he did not profess to be a Christian, and that the reason why he had induced the other to attend was peculiar. "To tell the truth," said he, "I was in Rochester when Mr. Finney was preaching there, and I observed how his preaching made those who were converted, conscientious. Many of his converts paid up debts of long standing, some of them outlawed; and by this means, I got some of my dues that I never expected to get. Now, that man yonder owes me two or three hundred dollars, and the debt is outlawed, and I thought that if he could only be converted under Mr. Finney I should get my pay." This man took a very unusual method to collect a debt, but he gave good testimony to the reputation of Mr. Finney's converts.

This plain practical application of the divine law to the conduct of men, President Finney always regarded as the principal element in all effective preaching; and whenever he saw looseness of practice and liberality of doctrine creeping into the church he thought he saw indications of the recreancy of the pulpit to its high trust. When he was above eighty years of age he gave vent to his deep feeling on this subject in an article on the "Decay of Conscience,"¹ in which we find such pungent sentences as these: "It has been fashionable now for many years to ridicule and decry Puritanism. Ministers have ceased to probe the consciences of men with the spiritual law of God. . . . I fear it has become fashionable to preach an anti-nomian gospel. . . . We need more 'sons of thunder' in the pulpit, — men that will flash forth the law of God like livid lightning and arouse the consciences of men. . . . We are set for the defence of the blessed gospel and for the vindication of God's holy law. Let us probe the consciences of our hearers; let us thunder forth the law and gospel of God until our voices reach the capital of the nation through our representatives in Congress. . . . Let our railroad rings and stock-gamblers and officials of every grade hear from the pulpit, if they come within its sound, such wholesome Puritanic preaching as will arouse them to better thoughts and a better life. Away with the milk-and-water preaching of a love of Christ that has no holiness or moral discrimination in it! Away with preaching a love of God that is not angry with sinners every day! Away with preaching a Christ not crucified for sin! Christ crucified for sin is the Christ that the people need. Let us rid ourselves of the imputation of neglecting to preach the law of God till the consciences of men are asleep."

Such passages as these from President Finney's pen, or from his lips while preaching, have led some persons to pronounce him a harsh, stern man; but no judgment could be more false, for severe as he was in his denunciation of wrong, he was at the same time exceedingly sympathetic. His heart melted and his eyes moistened at once at the sight of suffering or grief. Those who knew him would go to him first of all with their stories of injury or misfortune. The sick specially enjoyed his ministrations at the bed-side, and mourners were soothed and comforted by the remarkable appreciativeness and tenderness of his prayers at the burial service.

This sympathetic nature enabled him to fascinate children. When he performed the rite of infant baptism he used to take the little ones in his arms; and it is said by one who was accustomed to witness the scene that "he could thus take almost any child that was brought. The child seemed to be charmed into confidence in him, and then when he prayed and put the water of consecration on the little one's brow, he did it in a way that was, perhaps, never equalled. This was in consequence of the outflow of his soul for the little ones."

Mr. Finney was naturally sympathetic, but this peculiar tenderness, which was such a marked trait in his character, sprung from a deeper source than mere good nature. It was a religious sentiment; it was not only regulated, but prompted by his sympathy with God. The maudlin sentimentalism of our day, falsely called benevolence, which overrides conscience in order to gratify the desires of the natural heart or to relieve mere suffering was his abhorrence. The highest good of man was, in his thought, identified with the divine will. He did not suppose that he could truly love God's children without being in holy sympathy with their Father.

It was President Finney's habit to think of God's feelings as being actually hurt by sin, and it was this that most frequently drew from him the interjection "Oh!" which, as he uttered it, was often touchingly expressive. If he saw any exhibition of ill-temper in a Christian, he at once conceived of the Spirit as grieved away by it; and as for deliberate and long-continued wickedness, it was a treading under foot of the Son of God, for which the sorest punishment was deserved. No outrage seemed to him so great as the abuse of God's tender love in Christ, and therefore he acquiesced in the awards of the judgment day, and in his preaching he faithfully pointed them out. Still he was sometimes unable to dwell upon those Biblical incidents in which the severity of God was displayed, and when, at family worship, the reader came to some strong denunciation or threatening against sinners, he would often burst into tears and ask that the reading might be stopped; such was his compassion for those who must needs be punished.

This sympathy both with God and men imparted great fervor and power to his prayers; it fitted him to be an intercessor. He talked with God as one acquainted with Him. This close contact, or rather conversation with the Divine Mind stimulated his own mind to unusual activity, so that his public prayers, particularly in later years, were often more remarkable for their power and impressiveness than his sermons. He exemplified Coleridge's theory, that the "act of praying is the highest energy of which the human heart is capable."

His familiarity with God made him seem to some irreverent. It did lead him into a style of prayer that could not safely be imitated by others, however allowable it might be in him. Sometimes, for instance, he gave information in his prayers which, not being needed by the omniscient One, was presumed to be meant for the congregation; again, while thus addressing God, he would occasionally give a hint or administer a rebuke to certain persons in the assembly, yet, probably, without consciously purposing it. A characteristic instance of this occurred in connection with one of his Sunday morning services in Oberlin. The choir having sung an unannounced anthem without articulating the words with sufficient distinctness to make them intelligible, he began his prayer by saying, "O Lord, we trust Thou hast understood the song that thy servants have tried to sing; Thou knowest that we could not understand a word of it." If the organist, in his voluntary or interludes evidently aimed to display his musical skill rather than to excite or express devotional feeling, he, too, was liable to become a special subject of prayer. It should be remembered, however, in explanation of his frequent, and in general singularly appropriate, references in his prayers to those who were responsible for the service of song, that he had not only a delicate ear, but a keen sense of the fitness of music for the expression of spiritual emotions. His health being feeble, he met his theological class for a time at his home, where they enjoyed the easy-chairs and sofas. Noticing that one member of the class became drowsy during the lecture, he remembered him in the prayer (with which he always closed his lectures) telling the Lord in his familiar way that it was, of course, impossible for students to learn anything about theology unless they could at least keep themselves awake during the lecture, and then prayed that this power might be given to the unfortunate brother. The next day he removed the easy-chairs and put in their places others brought from the kitchen. When the class came in, he reminded them with a smile that the Lord had shown him how to answer his own prayer.

Similar was the prayer he once offered in a private circle of friends for a lady (one of the company) who had through culpable carelessness injured her health. "Help her to use her common sense," was the petition, which she afterwards acknowledged to be exactly fitted to her case.

At the dedication of Council Hall (three years ago) he was desired to offer the prayer. He hesitated at first, saying that he had several times declined to dedicate houses of worship that were not paid for. He, however, consented at last, giving as his reason in the preface to his prayer that he remembered that he had often offered himself to God and he was not finished yet: why should he not also offer this house? Such perfectionism will not be likely to incur the charge of heresy.

Not far from the time of the above incident, a college professor lay sick with typhoid fever. Happening to be in the pulpit on the Sabbath when his case was most critical, Mr. Finney startled the audience during the prayer by thanking the Lord that He had laid Brother C—— upon the sick-bed; "for," he added, "Thou knowest that he has been overworked and needs rest. Now, O Lord, keep him there till he is thoroughly rested, and then raise him up."

But these eccentricities, which sometimes made the stranger smile, did not ordinarily disturb the flow of devotional feeling in the hearts of his regular hearers. They knew that he was in free, unrestrained communion with his Heavenly Father, to whom he could scarcely help mentioning anything that concerned him, much less anything that grieved or troubled him; for in the narrower prayer-circle or in his home it was his habit to be even more specific. With the simplicity of a child, he was ready at any moment to "go to the Lord," as his phrase was, with all that concerned him or his friends. Experiences or occurrences which others would think too insignificant to find any mention in oral prayer, his childlike faith led him to speak of freely before the Father who forgetteth not the sparrows and numbereth the very hairs of the head.

But there was sublimity as well as simplicity in his wonderful faith in the power of prayer. Those who saw his holy intimacy and prevalence with the King of kings were often filled with a kind of awe; for he assayed with unusual boldness to "move the arm that moves the world." It seemed as if one of the old prophets had arisen. Elijah especially must have occurred to those who witnessed such scenes as the following, which by many is vividly remembered. It was in the midsummer of 1853; the fields were parched with drought; the slender harvest was fast perishing; all means of sustenance seemed likely to be cut off. The people were gathered in the great congregation, more anxious and sad than ever at the continued absence of any signs of rain. The cloud no bigger than a man's hand had not yet appeared in the haze of the sultry sky. It was very natural for him to take up this great burden in his prayer. It is distinctly remembered by some who were present that among other things he said,

"We do not presume to dictate to Thee what is best for us, yet thou dost invite us to come to Thee as children to a father, and tell Thee all our wants. We want rain! Our pastures are dry. The cattle are lowing, and wandering about in search of water. Even the little squirrels in the woods are suffering for want of it. Unless Thou givest us rain our cattle must die, for we shall have no hay for them in winter; and our harvest will come to nought. O Lord, send us rain! and send it now! Although to us there is no sign of it, it is an easy thing for Thee to do. Send it now, Lord, for Christ's sake!"

The rain came in torrents while he was in the midst of his sermon. He stopped and said, "Let us praise God for the rain," and announcing the hymn, —

"When all thy mercies, O my God,
My rising soul surveys," etc.,

he sung it almost alone, while the people wept. Probably the disciples of Tyndall would smile at such superstition, but those who believe that the apostle James may have had such as President Finney in mind when he spoke of the "fervent effectual prayer of the righteous" as "availing much," and held up the example of Elias, "a man subject to like passions as we are," for the encouragement of all believers, will rather rejoice that there has been in our time, in spite of the scientists, just such faith as this on the earth.

This simplicity of faith, which brought God into such close relations with men, made it easy for him to pass from spiritual to secular themes. The farmer, the merchant, or the mechanic found in him one who was interested in the details of their various occupations and able, often, to give them advice, — specially in regard to the conveniences and economies of the homestead. He was a constant reader of newspapers, the secular dailies and the religious, and even after he had passed the age of four-score he was as well informed as the most intelligent in the community concerning all current political and ecclesiastical movements. He was inclined to be conservative as regards the relation of the clergy to politics; but when political measures came into the sphere of Christian ethics he was ready both to speak and act, in the pulpit or out of it. He rarely attended political meetings, but it is remembered that on one occasion in Oberlin, after such men as Chase and Giddings had eloquently handled the great question of the day, — the relation of the national government to slavery, — President Finney followed with a speech of such thrilling power that it became the theme of conversation for weeks, while the speeches of the distinguished statesmen, able as they were, seemed too trivial in the comparison to be remembered.

Though easy and genial in social intercourse, Mr. Finney was understood to be averse to very much that is involved in what is called "society." He certainly distrusted the tendency of social gatherings which offered temptations to the unwholesome excitements of fashionable display. Therefore he thought it better for Christian people not to set in motion, or enter into, the endless round of fashionable entertainments, which, beginning with parties, commonly end in midnight balls and other worse forms of dissipation. Against all debasing amusements he preached and wrote earnestly. Some may have inferred from his newspaper articles that he was a man who never laughed and rarely smiled. This notion would have been quickly dissipated if they had seen him as he appeared at home or among his neighbors. In conversation he was full of good cheer, genial, and often playful, though never trivial. To a genuinely humorous remark he would respond with a most hearty laugh. To one who said that he did not believe in a personal devil, he replied, "Don't believe in a personal devil! Well, you resist him a while and you will believe in him." The column of "trifles" in the newspaper often entertained him; the play of young children afforded him real delight. The most lively and "muscular" Christian, if really a Christian, would find nothing in Mr. Finney's manner or spirit to repress the healthy exuberance of his feelings. How, then, shall we account for his intense prejudice against certain games and social entertainments that are quite generally pronounced harmless? It is to be remembered that during his whole life he had been engaged in the promotion of revivals, and, of course, had carefully watched all the counter-acting influences. He had observed that almost invariably the devil had made use of gay parties, balls, cards, and theatres, often successfully, to dissipate serious impressions. Hence his hatred of such amusements, and his fear of anything that might lead to them. It was his instinctive tendency to test the character of any kind of entertainment by its probable influence if participated in by Christians at a time when a revival was to be desired; and that to his mind was all the time. His views were respected, but not always adopted, by his associates and neighbors. It was noticed that in the mellow autumn of his life, the rigidity of his Puritanical aversion to really innocent games and amusements was considerably relaxed; though he never ceased to show the reasonable fear that our modern Christianity is becoming seriously weakened by lax morals as well as a too liberal faith.

Mr. Finney was always free and natural in his intercourse with the people of Oberlin. He seemed to be quite unconscious of the veneration in which he was held. He placed himself on a level with the lowest. He expected and desired the theological students and the members of the churches to call him simply "Brother Finney." He refused to receive the appellation of "Doctor of Divinity," as being inconsistent, in his view, with the Saviour's teaching, — "One is your Master, all ye are brethren." He seemed to care little what others thought of him, if they did not think of him too highly, but he was always thinking of and caring for others. He often stopped students upon the sidewalk if anything in their look or manner attracted his attention, and by direct inquiry ascertained at once their religious condition. Those who were thus approached for the first time were apt to recoil from his searching eye and his direct appeal, but afterwards they generally had no fear and were ready to open their hearts to him. Those who knew him best were most likely to observe him when on the street. They felt the magnetism of his personal presence, and whenever he passed they could not help fastening their eyes upon the tall, manly form, erect and vigorous to the end of his days, the elastic step, the earnest, soulful look. Those who had seen him every day for years always thought it a privilege to look upon him again. "When the eye saw him it gave witness to him; when the ear heard him it blessed him."

But he will be remembered with peculiar affection by those who, at various times, shared the hospitality of his delightful home. It was there that he revealed most fully the depth of his heart. There was no stiffness in his manner, no saintly reserve. He made his guests feel that they were at home with him. Those were most welcome (and they were literally hundreds) who came to talk with him on questions that related to their own religious experiences. The patient interest he took in strangers (often otherwise quite uninteresting) who visited him for this purpose was marvellous. He was ready always to lift the Christian pilgrim out of the slough, and to help him over the difficulties of the way. It was to him a joy to throw the light of his own wondrous experience upon the darkness of the struggling and the doubting. This was the chief work of the last years of his life. Hour after hour was thus spent in conversation with inquirers, or in writing letters to friends and strangers who wished his advice or consolation.

About three years before his death, on account of declining strength he resigned the pastorate of the First Church in Oberlin, and after that preached but seldom.

He stood in the pulpit for the last time in July, 1875. It was in the Second Church. His text was Isaiah xliii: 9, 10, which he handled with more than his accustomed vigor. His sermon was for some time the subject of remark, especially among the students; but there was then no reason to apprehend that he would never preach again. It seemed probable that he would live for years, and continue to exert the same beneficent influence that had so long been a blessing to the college and the community. His mind was still clear and vigorous, and his interest in passing events was as active as ever. No warning was given of his approaching death. He had been in his usual health, though somewhat wearied with the multitude of calls he received during and after the Commencement exercises. Almost every day he had taken his customary ride, always inviting some friend or invalid to ride with him. To the last he was just as thoughtful as ever of the sick and afflicted, and made many calls upon them from day to day. Saturday night and Sunday morning, Aug. 15, he was rather more than usually wearied; but in the afternoon he was well as usual again, and spent the time in cheerful conversation with his youngest son and wife, with Mr. and Mrs. Monroe (his daughter), and with Mrs. Finney. The son and his wife had fortunately come from a distance, just in time for a last visit and for a final benediction. Everything conspired to render this last day of his life peaceful and joyous. It was a beautiful day, and he enjoyed the refreshing air in a short walk towards evening with his wife. He talked as usual of heaven and of its nearness, yet nothing that he said led Mrs. Finney to imagine that his end was near. He was accustomed to speak of the probability of his passing away suddenly. The family gathered in the evening to sing his favorite songs of Zion, and he joined with them. The last hymn he sung was, "Jesus, lover of my soul." His voice was not as strong as it had been previously. During the night he complained of discomfort from indigestion; this increased, and he was restless and sleepless through the first part of the night. His watchful and careful wife, as usual, met every wish, and ministered to him. He expressed some apprehension that he might die before morning; but this was so common that she was not impressed by it, but told him that she thought he would rally.

Still the conviction increased that at last the time of his release had come. "You know," said he, "I have been inquiring a long time what the Lord would have me do. I have seemed to be waiting, waiting, waiting." He was reminded that this waiting was, no doubt, the Lord's will. To which he replied, "If I have not done much, I have not apostatized, have I?" It was his modest, perhaps half-playful way of saying that he had "kept the faith."

The thought of dying had long been delightful rather than a matter of dread. He had often spoken of his longing to go and to be with the Lord. Calmly he felt of his own pulse and said that if it were the pulse of anyone else, he should say that he was dying. He asked for water, and after drinking it, said "Perhaps this is the thirst of death." He was not mistaken. A few moments after (about three o'clock), with clear intelligence burning brightly to the last, he passed from earth to heaven — like Elijah in the chariot of fire.

It was fitting that his oldest associate, Dr. Morgan, should exclaim on the day of his burial, "My father, my father, the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof!"

HIRAM MEAD.

Oberlin, O.

THE MUTUAL RELATION OF HOME MISSIONS AND
THE CHRISTIAN COLLEGES.

THE inspired commission, "Go, preach the gospel," enfolds also the germ of Christian institutions. Go, preach; and in order to the raising up of preachers, and a succession of them, plant these germs. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth laborers into His harvest. Missions abroad thus find it essential to set up schools for training these laborers; missions at home learn the same necessity. Home missionaries go forth and preach, and organize churches, and found Christian colleges; and these, in turn, bring forward more men to join in the holy propaganda. The West owes to the East a debt of gratitude for its unstinted gift of cultured and self-denying men, who have made the West what it is; but the East is not able to keep up with the demand. Moreover our churches, for their own good, need to feel the responsibility of keeping up the true apostolic line; their piety needs to be brought to such a state of culture as will produce these rarest fruits,—consecrated preachers of the Word. Under a sense of the burden of obligation to give the gospel to the heathen world, it is a great relief for us to have learned that all the missionaries are not to be supplied from Christian lands, but that those who go are to train up a series of native pastors, who will carry the Word of Life to the homes of the people. In raising up native preachers for the home work, we have the same satisfaction. In both fields we seek to impart to the new society a self-sustaining power, one permanently operating. Men die, but institutions live. Ancient kings were wont, from captive people, to make choice of young men to be trained to service in their realm, as in the case of Joseph and of Daniel, who came to be prime ministers. Our King, Emanuel, also, entering new fields of conquest, appropriates the service of select young men as ministers of His kingdom.

By the middle of the second century the primitive evangelism that had struck out into Egypt had developed at Alexandria its theological school, which was long the nursery of learning and of piety. In 1585, Sir Walter Mildmay, founding his Emanuel College at Cambridge, said to Queen Elizabeth, "I have set an acorn, which, when it becomes an oak, God alone knows what will be the fruit thereof." Indeed, God alone did know, for some of that fruit, while the oak was yet young, dropped on this side the Atlantic. "That was the Puritan college," as say the Chronicles of Massachusetts, "at which more of our first ministers and magistrates were educated than any other." The Puritans, bringing the gospel to this country, made haste to found their Harvard, "dreading to leave an illiterate ministry to the churches when our present ministers shall lie in the dust." This was while one in two hundred or two hundred and fifty of the people was a graduate of that Emanuel College or of some of the English universities, and while the Colonies, in ten years after the landing at Plymouth, were able to count up among their own number seventy-seven ministers who had been pastors in the Church of England, and who were, many of them, men of learning, genius, and power. Sixty years later, in the Colony of Connecticut, ten new-country ministers originated Yale, in their "sincere regard to and zeal for upholding the Protestant religion by a succession of learned and orthodox men." So, Dartmouth and Bowdoin and Princeton.

The gospel, after the Puritan way, coming towards the West has imparted this same divine impulse. Dr. Baldwin, speaking of the five institutions which the College Society had at first taken up, says, "Their origin in every case is traceable to the increased interest in the Great West, which gave birth to the American Home Missionary Society and other kindred organizations. These colleges were all projected by religious men, most of whom were home missionaries." And later, he says, "The colleges which it (the Society) aids are formed almost exclusively by home missionaries. They are the natural offspring of the great home missionary movement at the West." A convention of these same workers in Wisconsin said, "We believe that the work of home missions runs naturally and necessarily into the planting and sustaining of those institutions which aim at a higher Christian education."

The oldest of these institutions, the Western Reserve College, formed in 1826, is, together with the American Home

Missionary Society associating its Jubilee with the National Centennial. Here was the "New Connecticut," receiving her people, her ideas, her church-life, her ministers, from the old State, and the Missionary Society of Connecticut had been mothering them for a quarter of a century. The new National Society, in its first report, sets forth a whole synod of Presbyterian Churches, eighty-seven of them already gathered on the Western Reserve and served by forty-two so-called Presbyterian ministers, almost all of whom had been Congregationalists and were missionaries of the old Connecticut Society. All this under the working of "the plan of union."

Now, these home missionaries are the movers for the college. The first one from Connecticut, Rev. Joseph Badger, in 1801, in a four-horse wagon, emigrating with his wife and six children, brings along the college idea. In 1803 he and a dozen laymen, among them David Hudson, with the purpose of "establishing an institution adequate to the preparation of young men for the ministry," are incorporated as the "trustees of the Erie Literary Society." The school is a long time in getting under way, and still it languishes until, in 1822, other home missionaries take hold of it, change the name, and push it through. The chief workers are Revs. Caleb Pitkin, John Seward, Harvey Coe, Giles H. Cowles, D.D., Simeon Woodruff, Benjamin Fenn, and Stephen J. Bradstreet, of the First Presbyterian Church of Cleveland, and all of these were home missionaries. Their model is the New England college; their aim, "to raise up a learned and godly ministry."

In order to this, a theological department is instituted. When Rev. C. B. Storrs, in 1828, left his pastorate at Ravenna, it was that he might become Professor of Theology as well as president of the college. His educational career was short, but he had made a profound impression upon his students; and a local history says, "His name will ever be associated with the interests of religion, benevolence, and learning in the West."

In 1829 Illinois College follows under the same missionary inspiration. Since 1816 Salmon Giddings has been at St. Louis, under the Connecticut Society. In 1825 he brings on from Andover, John M. Ellis and locates him at Kaskaskia.

Ellis, at his ordination in the Old South Church, Boston, had received from Elias Cornelius the charge, "Build up an institution of learning which shall bless the West for all time." He comes out with that purpose in mind. He and Lippincott, in 1828, make exploration and locate a Seminary at Jacksonville, to which place he removes to help on the institution and to take charge of the new church there. He gets his first subscription for the school from Dea. William Collins, of Collinsville, to whom, on leaving Litchfield, Conn., in 1818, his pastor, Lyman Beecher, had said, "You are going on a wild-goose chase." In his first report from this field to the Society Mr. Ellis announces thirty-six persons received to the church, divulges his plan for a seminary, and calls for help and for more missionaries.

Now, as God would have it, just as that report comes to hand in the Home Missionary, a divine ferment is going on in the Divinity School of Yale College in behalf of evangelizing the West. Ellis's report quickens the leaven. Seven young men sign their names in solemn pledge as the "Illinois Association," to go out and take up that enterprise. Ellis goes on East and helps them to raise money. And so Illinois College comes to be. "Great assistance," says the president, "was derived from the co-operation of the Home Missionary Society, especially from their able and efficient secretaries, Rev. Drs. Absalom Peters and Charles Hall. In the Fall of 1829 Messrs. Sturtevant and Baldwin came on to set up the college, designated in their commission, "to the State of Illinois." The names of the others were Mason Grosvenor, William Kirby, John F. Brooks, Elisha Jenney, and Asa Turner. To this list there were added those of William Carter, Albert Hale, Romulus Barnes, Lucien Farnham, and Flavel Bascom. All of these, except Grosvenor, soon come to Illinois, under commission of the Society, take up their missionary work and plant for the College its constituency of churches. Seven of them become its trustees. One, as professor and then as president, identifies his life-work with the institution.

Out of this movement comes Monticello Seminary, which has educated two thousand young ladies, and the Jacksonville Female Academy, a fountain of life, and also the College

Society itself, born of the brain of Theron Baldwin, and served by him until the day of his death, in planting and nourishing the newer colleges of the opening West. Dr. Absalom Peters, who had commissioned the Illinois Band, years afterward, in his sermon before this College Society, claimed the Society as "a child of home missions."

Next, in 1832, comes Wabash College, at Crawfordsville, Indiana. Rev. James H. Johnston, many years a pastor at that place, in a sermon upon "A Forty Years' Ministry in Indiana," previous to 1865, says, "This college owes its origin to the counsels and efforts of five home missionaries, who early selected the Upper Wabash Valley as their field of labor." These were Revs. James Thomson, James A. Carnabron, John S. Thomson, Edmund O. Hovey, and John M. Ellis. The last-named was the same who had pioneered Illinois College, and who then, as agent of the American Education Society, was moved to strike for a college in Indiana as a missionary necessity. After three days of consultation and prayer by these "almost penniless home missionaries, with a few elders," as one describes them, they went out in a body to the spot selected in the midst of the primeval forest, and there, kneeling in the snow and joining with Ellis in prayer, they dedicated the ground to God for a Christian college.

One of those young missionaries, Mr. Hovey, having become a professor, yet abides in that position at a green old age, still saying, as he said at first, that if the college had taken him out of his evangelistic work, he would not have gone into it.

Pres. Tuttle, kindly favoring me with documents, writes, "From these you will see how largely is Wabash College indebted to the American Home Missionary Society. I am sure, as you look at this fruit of the tree planted by its agency, you will not be ashamed of its work, as we certainly are not ashamed of our royal origin. If you think of us as we are, you will be glad of this portion of the Society's work in the early part of its first half century." At the Quarter-Centennial of the College Society, the president also said, "Wabash College is not the child of strife, but of home missions."

The next was Marietta, 1835. The college grew out of a local seminary. At the Quarter-Centennial, just referred to,

Dr. Henry Smith, a former president of Marietta, testified, "This college may truly be said to have been a child of Providence. If the Institution could assume personality, and were asked the question, 'Can you tell me, child, who made you?' it would probably be obliged to answer, with Mrs. Stowe's Topsy, 'I dun'no; I'spect I growed.'" It did grow, and it grew from very small beginnings; or, what is better, as Dr. Smith says, it was born in a revival which occurred in the early school. The first two men of the college, Drs. D. H. Allen and Henry Smith, also two other professors, were students from Andover; while the first president, Joel H. Linsley, D. D., came from the Park-Street pastorate, Boston, known as a revival preacher of great power and success. This college came up as a part of that grand home missionary crusade which was precipitated upon the territory northwest of the Ohio River in 1788 by the "Ohio Company" of Massachusetts citizens, whose representative, Rev. Dr. Manasseh Cutler, had secured, in the Ordinance of 1787, the provisos for freedom and education. Bringing along their own pastor, they set up their altar on the first Sabbath after landing from their flat-boat Mayflower. In 1839 Prof. Allen wrote to the Society, "This is emphatically home mission ground. Almost every church on this field is the fruit of home missionary labor. Those that are now able to sustain themselves were made so by your Society." And it was these churches that rallied to the support of the college, and that used it for bringing forward their young men for the ministry.

Lane Seminary was named for the brothers Lane, natives of Maine, who made the initial endowment and whose primary object was to "educate pious young men for the gospel ministry." The idea of the seminary was indicated by Dr. Lyman Beecher in a letter to the trustees in 1831: "The work of providing an evangelical ministry for the West must be done at the West. The East cannot furnish the requisite number of students nor the funds to educate them; and if she could, it were better that the ministry of the West should be indigenous (native) rather than imported. As an ally, the Atlantic States may do and are willing to do much. But it is the sons of the West, educated on her own soil, who must preach the gospel to the West ; and, in the great work of educating such a ministry, the Lane Seminary may, if prospered, exert an important influence."

Oberlin, in 1834, did not come up so much from home missionary beginnings as its predecessors ; but the man who was the founder of the institution, Rev. John J. Shipherd, was a home missionary at Elyria, under commission, when he devised the scheme. The year before his entering upon the Oberlin movement, the Society, in its annual report, condensed his work thus : "Revival, Bible class, three Sabbath Schools, Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society, Bible and Tract Societies." The first inspiration of the College was not that of the anti-slavery cause, nor of any peculiar views in theology. These causes of notoriety and of power came in later. It was simply a call from another John in the wilderness, whose proclamation was a "covenant," which, though not a pledge of asceticism, was a call to a consecration to a higher Christian life, through the rigors of labor and self-denial, in order to the building up of such an institution as Oberlin has come to be. This institution was founded in order to secure the broadest missionary results, for as the colonists subscribe their covenant they do it, as they say, "Viewing with peculiar interest the influence which the valley of the Mississippi must exert over our nation and the nations of the earth." When, in 1871, the National Council met at Oberlin, its dignified moderator in that immense assembly declared, "We stand upon the grave of buried prejudice." That was well said, for out of that grave has come a spiritual body of life and light. On account of that prejudice, Oberlin was not at first taken under the wing of the College Society ; but long ago, by the simple force of its character, it was brought into a hearty recognition.

Knox College was another importation of colony life with initial endowment provided for in the sale of lands. It grew out of the same impulse which that revival era at the East had given the churches to save our country for Christ. Dropping down upon the prairie, the new power of evangelism drew toward it the sympathy and co-operation of the missionary churches and pastors round about, and in turn rapidly multiplied such elements of its own constituency.

"The Iowa Band" of 1843, as is well-known, were twelve home missionary apostles from Andover. Dr. Badger went up and helped on the movement, promising the young men commissions for their chosen field. A farewell meeting was held in Andover, Dr. Bacon preaching, and Dr. Badger giving to the Band an affectionate charge. In one of their early consultations at the seminary one of their number aspired to say, "If each one of us can plant one good permanent church, and all together build a college, what a work that would be!" Arriving, they find the same idea working in the minds of the few home missionaries already on the ground, Asa Turner (of the Illinois Band,) J. A. Reed, and Reuben Gaylord. At the close of one of the first meetings, held at Denmark, they are invited to listen to plans for founding a college. Only four months after their arrival a meeting of ministers and others interested in the project is held. In two years the location is fixed, in another the building is up, and in yet another the institution is opened. Soon the regular classes are under training, and better yet, are receiving the baptism of the Spirit.

Beloit College commenced in 1847. In 1843 the Society had commissioned the young A. L. Chapin "to go to the West." The next annual report said of him, "Settled at Milwaukee; entire support pledged." In that first year he found the home missionaries, in their General Convention at Beloit, twenty-eight of them, already thinking about a college. Then, during the next year, came a series of four conventions, and Beloit College became a corporation. In two years more the cornerstone was laid, and with it the visible life of the college appeared. Almost every one of the ministerial members of those conventions was a Home Missionary. Stephen Peet, the agent of the Home Missionary Society, it is said, was the man "to whom belongs the honor of being foremost and chief of the founders of Beloit College." Among the conspicuous workers for the college was Dexter Clary, who during the ten years of his pastorate at Beloit and the twenty years of his home mission superintendency, was a trustee of the Institution and the secretary of its Board.

The Pacific University came on in 1848; in 1847, within a month after the treaty of the Oregon boundary had been made known, Dr. Badger asked the young George H. Atkinson to begin the home mission work on the Pacific coast. A friend in New York had said to the secretary, "If you will send him to California, I will pay one fifth of the expense for five years." The doctor replied, "We cannot send our missionaries to a foreign country; ours is a home missionary society. California is a foreign country. We can only send him to Oregon." Before his leaving, Dr. Badger sent him to Dr. Baldwin, who said, "You are going to Oregon. Well, found an academy that shall grow into a college, as we did in Illinois." Waiting eight months for the first vessel, the home missionary sailed, in company with three foreign missionaries who were bound for the Sandwich Islands.

After a four months' voyage, he had to wait three months with them in the land of their adoption for a Hudson Bay bark to take him on to his home field. After the pattern shown on the Mount, it did come to pass, — first, the Tualatin Academy, then the college. Dr. S. H. Marsh, the first and only president, went out in 1853, with the specific purpose of building up the institution. And so the home mission idea and the college idea, going out hand in hand, have been doing jointly the evangelizing work upon that coast.

The Chicago Theological Seminary is the creature of the Congregational Churches of the Interior, to which it is amenable, and by which its executive officers are elected in the Triennial Convention. The home missionary, Peet, was the father of the idea; home missions developed its field, and largely its constituency of churches. When, in 1854, in convention assembled, they gave it existence, the mass of them were under home missionary aid; and now, upon the field of its supporters, four hundred of them at least are yet in the same condition.

The Lagrange Collegiate Institute, at Ontario, Ind., was founded in 1837, by Nathan Jenks, Esq., who, converted in New York, under Mr. Finney, had forsaken an infidel club of which he had been an active member, and had consecrated his wealth and business talents to the defence of the cause which he had labored to destroy. This institute was modelled after that at Oberlin, and Rev. John J. Shipherd was one of its trustees and guardians. A succession of home missionaries in the neighborhood have stood as a series of godfathers to the school, chief among whom is Rev. Rufus Patch, who has served as its principal for twenty-six years.

This institution being one of indigenous growth and not of foreign endowment, blessed with the riches of poverty, making no effort to attract the gaze of the world, has been doing its quiet work upon the rising generation until its printed catalogue reports the names of 1,651 persons to whom it has afforded the advantages of an academic training. The list, if completed, would run up well-nigh to 2,000. Among these the institute counts twenty-two ministers of the gospel in different denominations. Several of them became foreign missionaries, among whom were Justus Doolittle, of China, and G. B. Nutting. The late president of Hillsdale College, Michigan, Rev. Dr. Graham, and Rev. Obed Dickinson, a patriarch in Oregon, were students at Lagrange. This institution also counts sixteen physicians, among whom is Dr. E. W. Jenks, president of the Medical College at Detroit; twenty-five lawyers and a great multitude of teachers. Looking back over such a condensed catalogue, one is deeply impressed with the cumulative and expansive power of a literary institution.

Here is the way that Liber College came to be and what it came to do: In 1838 the Home Missionary Society had sent to the new settlements about St. Mary's, Ohio, the young Rev. Isaac N. Taylor, of Yankee blood. In 1840 he received a vague verbal message to the effect that somebody, thirty or forty miles west of St. Mary's, over in Indiana, wanted to see him. He directed a sealed letter "To any Presbyterian, west or southwest of St. Mary's, within forty miles, greeting," and, going himself ten miles, to the extremity of "squatter sovereignty," he confided the letter, as addressed, to a hunter going to the Wabash. The letter reached its destination, and evoked a call,—"Come over into Indiana and help us." Going, he found the people assembled at a log barn raising, and preached that same night in the cabin of Ira Towle, who had sent for him, and who at last, in gratitude for the Society's work, willed to it his farm when his wife should be done with its use. Its value, $1,600, long since went into the Society's treasury. The missionary organized in that neighborhood the N. S. Presbyterian churches of Portland and New Corydon, and the Congregational churches of Liber and Pisgah, and in 1853 founded the Liber Institution. Some fourteen or fifteen hundred scholars have enjoyed its advantages. Among them are eleven ministers, of different denominations, while the county seats around are full of Liber lawyers, one of whom is Judge Taylor, of Fort Wayne; and the Liber doctors and Liber school-teachers are in all the country round about. I know of no academic school in the West that has done its work out of so deep poverty as this has experienced. I know not where so much good has been done at so little cost.

Olivet College, in Michigan, was a scion from the Oberlin stock, and was set by the same John J. Shipherd. It has been nurtured by the churches, all of which, with few exceptions, have been or are now beneficiaries of the Society.

Washburn College, in Kansas, took its rise in the praying and planning of the General Association, every one of the churches of which had been planted and nourished by the same Society. That body elected the first Board of Trustees, and still maintains a foster care over the institution.

Carleton College, in Minnesota, had its inception in and its trustees elected by the General Conference. All of its churches, except one, are the children of home missions.

Drury College, in Missouri, founded only three years ago, and counting now over two hundred pupils, as a lady visitor from the North testifies, "was the outgrowth of home missionary work in the southwest, the result of a deeply-felt need of the young churches there for more laborers."

Such, too, is largely the story of Ripon and Wheaton and Thayer and Tabor and Doane and Colorado Colleges. In Dakota, before an acre of land has been offered at public sale by the Government, the missionary pastors and churches are fostering their college idea.

Besides sharing so largely in the founding of these institutions, the home missionaries have ever been among the foremost in labor and gifts, according to their means, for the support of the same. Out of their deep poverty, to their power and beyond their power, these men have joined their people in giving. Their personal service and influence have been essential; not a few of them have served in voluntary agencies for raising friends; many have served in the trusteeship; seven of the Illinois Association became trustees of their college. The president says that in the nineteen years of William Kirby's trusteeship, there were but two regular meetings of the Board at which he was not present. — One of these was held out of time on account of the cholera, and from the other he turned back only when, upon reaching the Illinois River, he found it impassable; — and this is the more notable when we consider that his residence for a portion of the time, was more than two hundred miles away, and for the greater part little short of one hundred miles; and that the journey was made in his own conveyance, entirely at his own charges, and often over muddy roads and across swollen streams. President Pierce reports that, while the average salary of ministers on the Reserve was not more than $300, thirty of them gave $3,000, an average of $100 each; and the faculty, with small salaries, pledged $10,000. It is a thrilling tale how the Iowa College struck its roots back into the prayer and toil and faith and self-sacrifice of the early churches, taught by the example of their missionary pastors. Year by year, it was toil and praying, toil and giving; for, as their historian says, "When they could do nothing else, they could at least pray; they so worked and prayed, and prayed and worked." In the second year of the college, at their Association, a subscription of $442.65 was made, all but four of the twenty-five subscribers being ministers, and their current salary being $400, with the usual shrinkage of from ten to twenty-five per cent. At the next meeting, $450 were pledged, and the minutes show this record: "The wives also of the ministers, anxious to share in the enterprise of founding the college, resolved to raise $100 out of their own resources, and $70 were put down by the fourteen ladies who were present." "It was a great sum, then, $5," said one of them years afterward, "but I managed to pay it." When Carleton, at the General Conference, was calling to itself a president, and so taking on the consciousness of college life, the giving that rolled up $16,000 had gone on until every home missionary was down for a sum that went beyond the point of feeling it. Up there the thrilling scene abides in thought, as a sacred memento. But why delay? Ab uno disce omnes. This, with these pioneers, has been an abiding enthusiasm. Growing old themselves as their favorite institutions are coming into vigor, they are only desirous to make them more and more a power for good.

We turn now to consider the reflex influence of these Christian colleges upon home missions. We find the service fully repaid. The institutions have met the purpose for which they were founded. They have themselves become evangelists. Their instructors and guardians have accepted this as their line of missionary work, as their allotment of hardness to be endured for the Master's sake.

In the early stages of college development, the position of the officers is ordinarily one of as much toil and self-sacrifice as that of any of the men under commission as missionaries. In that period their salaries are meagre, their nominal support precarious, their poverty often pinching. In one of the older of these colleges, the income of which from endowment now leaves a surplus after paying ample salaries to a full corps of instructors, there were times when professors had to leave letters in the post-office because the postage was a draft which their exchequer could not honor; when it was as much as ever that bread and raiment could be secured. For many years, one man, with a large family, was thus embarrassed; and yet he is a scholar and a teacher, who has, these many years, occupied places in eminent schools of learning. Indeed, there were several men who served that institution in those days of poverty, who in other relations have formed a galaxy in the scientific and theological world, Prof. Elias Loomis, Hon. Elizur Wright, Dr. Delamater, Rev. Drs. L. P. Hickok, E. P. Barrows, Clement Long, H. N. Day, S. C. Bartlett, H. P. Hitchcock, P. A. Chadbourne, and N. S. Burton.

It detracts nothing from the erudition and the brilliancy of the Chair of Biblical Literature in Chicago seminary, standing upon an endowment of over $30,000, that its incumbent, as a professor in that college, once had a salary of only $600, not more than two thirds of which was paid, and that largely in goods contributed for the support of the instructors.

President Carroll Cutter, who has been preparing the history of the college for his jubilee address, writes me, "The professors here, down to 1860, had, I should think, as hard work and as poor pay as any home missionary." At the Quarter Centennial of the College Society, at Marietta, as the old professors and presidents grew familiar in their reminiscences, I was thrilled with their stories of early toil and of pinching finances. I was profoundly impressed with the fact that these college men had been as real home missionaries as though they had been out upon the field and had been enduring as much of deprivation as the average of missionary pastors and evangelists; and then, too, I was deeply moved with gratitude that such men had consecrated themselves to such endurance for the sake of bringing the opportunities of a higher education within the reach of multitudes of us, sons of the West, who, otherwise, could never have reached them. Having enjoyed not a little of the luxury of placing "missionary boxes" packed full of love and comfort, and attended with sympathetic correspondence, I realized that these patient college workers had not participated in those material and spiritual perquisites of office, and that they had had no such channel of communication, no such bond of fellowship, as the Home Missionary Magazine affords its corps of laborers. And the same is true to-day. All along the frontier line of these fountains of Christian learning there are not a few guardians of the same who stand at their post, on scant allowance, with patient endurance, in order that multitudes of youth may come there and drink.

In the matter of pure evangelistic work, these institutions have abounded. The preaching members of the faculties have generally done double duty, supplying the home pulpit, ministering the Word in the destitute churches round about, not unfrequently setting up and carrying forward a church organization. A president on the Pacific coast says that he has done ten years of uncommissioned and mostly unpaid home missionary preaching. Such service at the same time makes the college known, and wins for it friends, students, and support. Then a vast deal of evangelism is accomplished by the college people, who with a society, or without, are often sustaining from three to ten Sabbath Schools in the contiguous neighborhoods. And these missions sometimes grow into churches.

The Christian colleges have been effective, too, in the matter of winning souls. Several of the older of them were born of that inspiration of revival which set the East to work in earnest for the Christianizing of the West. And so in the lineage of faith we should expect that these institutions would be true to the spirit of revivals, and have a zeal for them. In looking through Dr. Baldwin's thesaurus of college literature, one is struck with the constancy and the pervasiveness of revival influences in these schools. There seems to have been a holy ambition to secure the conversion of as large a percentage of the students as possible. The day of prayer for colleges has been a uniform blessing to them. In Illinois College, previous to 1848, there had been six distinct revival seasons, which brought one hundred students over upon the Lord's side. At Marietta, of the four hundred and four graduates from the regular course, seventy-five per cent were hopefully pious upon leaving the college, and of these one third were converted while in the institution. At Wabash, the early years were blessed with revivals, so that by 1851 the president could say, "No class has ever graduated here without having enjoyed from one to four revivals of religion, and four fifths of all its alumni have gone forth the enrolled servants of the living God." From that time onward there have been repeated seasons of refreshing and marked isolated cases of conversion, so that, of the three hundred and fourteen graduates, one hundred and forty-eight are hopefully pious. Up to the day of his death, Mr. Finney seemed to rejoice in each year's new company of students, as so much convertible material. This passion for souls, imparted more or less to the college, the churches, and the community of Oberlin, has resulted in an almost constant revival, which has added hundreds and tens of hundreds to the company of cultured, consecrated young men and women. A son said to his father that he did not wish to go to Olivet, for if he did he would have to be converted. Knox has sent forth one hundred and fifty pious graduates; while of the four hundred and seventy-five student-members of the First Church of Christ in Galesburg, up to 1872, three hundred and twenty-five had entered the church on profession of faith.

At Wheaton, of the eighty-nine graduates, all except one were professing Christians ; and of the forty now in the college classes, every one is a professed disciple of Christ. At the Rockford Seminary, of the two hundred and forty graduates, more than nine tenths have been professors of religion ; and more than five hundred of the three thousand pupils have become Christians while at the seminary. Four fifths of all the graduates of Beloit have gone forth with the Christian hope, and not a single year has passed without the Divine Spirit's special presence among the students. Similar statements could be made of all these Christian institutions.

And how have these colleges succeeded in their prime mission, that of raising up ministers of the gospel ? They have not been disappointed. Western Reserve has furnished for this purpose one third of all its college graduates, one hundred and twenty-seven in all ; Oberlin, from its own college graduates, two hundred and fifty-seven ; Wabash, one hundred and six ; Marietta, one hundred and sixty-five ; Illinois, about one hundred ; Knox, fifty ; Beloit, one hundred and six ; and about half as many more from students who did not graduate. The same is true of nearly all the colleges. A large number of young men have pursued in them a partial course, and have then gone into the ministry of the different denominations. Lane Seminary has trained six hundred and twelve Christian ministers ; Chicago Seminary, one hundred and ninety-seven in eighteen years ; Oberlin Seminary, three hundred and seven ; while from all departments and from full or partial courses Oberlin has furnished from six to eight hundred ministers. The Mission Institute, founded at Quincy, Ill., by Dr. Nelson, before it disappeared had furnished about one hundred missionary ministers and companions of the same. Among the number, are Doane, twenty-three years in Micronesia, and now in Japan ; Rendell, thirty-one years in India ; and Mellen, twenty-four years in Africa.

Seventeen or eighteen hundred would probably be a fair estimate of the number of preachers of the Word already raised up for the different denominations by this series of Puritan institutions in the West. Subtract the influence of these men from the moral forces of these regions, and who would care to contemplate the result? And then, as time goes on and the population increases, here are these perennial sources of moral power to continue the process of subordinating the people to the realm of Christ. At the Andover Jubilee in 1860, Dr. Badger identified no less than three hundred men who had gone out from that seminary alone to the western field, and whose agency had here been concerned in the founding of churches, schools, and colleges. All praise to that seeming prodigality at the East, which has only proved to be a Christian economy. It was the same wisdom which, so early and so lavishly, made provision in the founding of these institutions for keeping the supply up with the demand; for it now appears that the material out of which ministers are made already preponderates this way. In the theological seminaries the percentage of graduates from the western colleges is relatively more and more in their favor. Dr. Chapin shows that the six interior States have one hundred and thirty-nine theological students, while the six New England States, with more than twice the number of Congregational members, have only one hundred and forty.

If the question be asked, What is the West doing to raise up missionaries for the foreign field? the answer is that, as the West came to the help of the East in subduing the Rebellion, so she also strikes hands with her natural ally in the work of subjugating this world to the kingdom of Christ. While yet under the strain of new-country necessities, the West, through this series of sister institutions, has already supplied about one hundred and twenty-five men, who have passed the inspection for service in foreign parts. To this number must be added the wives of these and a goodly number of lady missionaries. John M. Ellis, in the seminary, had designed to go to India. Deciding to come West, he wrote his father, "I am persuaded that I have the prospect of contributing to the success of the gospel in India more effectually by laboring in this country than by going there in person." Of the two colleges which he aided in founding, Wabash has already sent five missionaries abroad, and Illinois has sent ten, of whom two, Fairbank and Atkinson, are in India, the very land to which Ellis had thought of going; while these are but the first fruits of that early planting at the West, whose harvest the world is yet to reap. The secretaries of the Boards of Foreign Missions are learning that the West is a hopeful field for enlistments. That is all right. The young blood is here. We owe it in return for what we have received; we owe it to the Master. It will be a baptism of blessing to our churches; it will enhance the home evangelism.

But the founders of these colleges designed not only to raise up a ministry for the churches, but to provide Christian men for the other professions and vocations, as a vast evangelizing power. Their object was to train minds for the higher purposes of life, to furnish the leaders of society, the lawyers, the physicians, the teachers, the editors, authors, statesmen, jurists, business men. Doing such a work, these institutions are an indispensable agency of a Christian civilization. They are an elevating power, bringing on whole systems of education, toning up public morals, giving strength and permanently operative force to society. There is a contagion in learning. Education takes the supremacy in communities and in states. Simply marvellous is the influence of this educating process, not only in the regions round about these moral centres, but throughout the land. Who can estimate the religious power that has gone forth with these thousands of college men? Oberlin keeps enrolled from a thousand to twelve hundred students. Western Reserve, from the beginning, in all departments, counts up five thousand. Beloit counts two hundred and twelve graduates, and two thousand students in all. Wabash counts up in all three thousand. And so the figures run. Seven years ago Dr. Baldwin found 2,105 graduates from these institutions. This number cannot now fall short of 3,000, while not less than 30,000 young men must have enjoyed, in whole or in part, these educational advantages. And it is an excellence of this training that the students, being fewer in number, are brought into direct contact with the mature mind and character of the professors themselves, and are not put off upon tutors, who are making their temporary teaching but a stepping-stone to other callings.

The work done by these schools for our country has a fine illustration in the single line of Christian patriotism. When the slaveholders' rebellion broke out, these colleges were almost literally emptied of their soldier material. Wabash counted two hundred and seventy-five of her sons in the army, of whom there were three major-generals, three brigadiers, nine colonels, six lieutenant-colonels, three majors, eleven surgeons, five chaplains, fifty captains, and forty lieutenants. Oberlin counted seven hundred, of whom one hundred fell in the service. Marietta, one hundred and four, who furnished twenty-eight line officers, and represented every one of the then twenty graduated classes. Young Iowa counted sixty-five; Beloit, sixty-nine with twenty-four line officers; and each of the several others had its similar roll of honor.

Thus we find that the relation of home missions to the Christian colleges is one of mutual service. The divine ideal with which we started out — Go preach; pray for laborers — has proved its divine wisdom in the history of the church. It is the true policy in Christian lands and in foreign lands; it is the policy for the future. Into the States yet to come out of the wild expanses beyond, let the same old gospel go, with its preaching and its educating appliances, and with God's blessing, our country will be saved.

At the opening of this jubilee period of home missions, the anxious inquiry among Christians at the East was, What shall be done to save the West from Romanism, infidelity, and irreligion? The answer was, Send out Christian families; send out home missionaries; plant churches; plant Christian colleges. They did so. What has been the result? The West has been saved from the domination of those systems of error; and more than this, the country has been saved from a gigantic civil insurrection, and slavery has been overthrown. All of this, largely, because the West, by a manifold evangelism, had been held true to the history and to the life of the nation. So, in this land, let our Messiah have dominion from sea to sea, and our country will find, in the evident purpose of God, that it has come to the kingdom for such a time as this, — to be the great missionary nation of the earth.

DR. SOUTH AND HIS SERMONS.

THE sermons of Dr. South appeared in an era of great social and political turbulence. The atmosphere of the times was friendly to pulpit eloquence. Conspicuous and unblushing vices challenged assault; the revolutionary spirit, — the sense that vast changes were impending, not only roused men to intense excitements, but fused them into a condition of impressibility, while the poverty of competing moral influences left it an uncontested field.

Yet South is by no means to be set down simply as the child of fortunate circumstances. Perhaps he owed as little to their inspiration as any of his contemporaries, — his dense, tenacious nature resisting and throwing off all encroachments upon its freedom. He was not a man who easily takes the shape of any mould and as readily loses it. Such was the imperious, forth-putting, resolute cast of his spirit that he would have been essentially the same, in all the great outlines of character, whenever or wherever he had lived.

We are inclined to put in the forefront the individuality of these discourses as indicating their most notable trait. They are a literary transfusion of the preacher's life; they are warm and electric with the flush of his vitality, — surcharged with the total contents of his mind. Indeed, a writer can impart no higher worth to his pages than to give them, through and through, the coloring of his own personality. Here lies the true wealth of art. We admire the bold mountain range outlined upon the canvas, we are charmed by this cluster of foliage or that expanse of water; but separated from human life, from its hopes and fears, its victories and defeats, the landscape fails of any supreme charm and attraction: the hunter's trail or the ruins of a deserted cabin, which show that it has been associated with our common humanity, lift it at once into the higher spheres of interest. It is not the whole truth to say that South's sermons are characteristic. They are his by the same indefeasible right that his tone of voice or the fashion of his countenance belonged to him. They exhibit not only his social, political, and theological opinions, not only his literary and forensic accomplishments, but himself. They were created in his own image; there is a subtle, mysterious metempsychosis of the man into the discourse which has few parallels in the whole range of English prose.¹

The timbre of South's mind was rhetorical, with a decided mathematical cadence. His writings are nowhere marked by subtlety of thought. However vigorously the surface may be stirred, he seldom strikes deeply into the subsoil. If he is never shallow, he is rarely profound. He seems ill at ease and labors under constraint when he attempts abstruse themes; then he is shorn of the clearness and triumphant cogency with which he assails some popular sin or illuminates some practical duty. While he is glorious in large word-frescoes, his skill falters in minute intricacy of finish. This is only another method of saying that he was not both philosopher and orator. The philosophic mind burns at a steady heat: the oratorical flashes like an ignited grain of powder. The first is eager to discover truth in its logical and formulated connections; the second is intent upon utilizing it here and now. The one simply prints, the other is pictorial.

South is also to be excluded from the company of poet-preachers. If Prof. Masson's dictum² is to be accepted, that "poets are pre-eminently men that breathe their own spirit into things, that make self dominant over what is distinct from self," it might be necessary to recall this decision. These sermons beat with great pulses of individuality, they were carried out on the long swells of an intense nature; yet it is difficult to see how any function of rhyme or measure could translate them into poetry. Whether our paragraphs will rise above the prose line or not depends upon the quality rather than the quantity of personality lodged in them. The fact can be more readily pointed out than explained. "In the higher poetry," said Wordsworth,¹ "we look chiefly for a reflection of the wisdom of the heart and the grandeur of the imagination." South's wisdom was mainly intellectual, — a wisdom elaborated in the processes of the brain, — and his imagination never reached anything like grandeur. Without question, there was no little poetic material in his nature, but some vice of construction ruined the edifice. Though simple and passionate, he lacked sensuousness. An unporousness of fibre, a brilliancy in which there was more light than heat, a gravity and weight of nature that discouraged skyward flights and kept him well down to the earth, — a certain strain of angular exactness filtered into his blood, precluded any notable success either in the prose or rhythmical forms of poetry, and he had the good sense to see it. The words of an illustrious contemporary, touching his political work, may be not inaptly borrowed to phrase South's conviction in this matter: "I should not choose this manner of writing, wherein, knowing myself inferior to myself (led by the genial power of nature to another task), I have the use, as I may account, but of my left hand."²

South's mind was not of the tropical, spontaneous order. Some men find their happiest thoughts as springs on the hillside find their cool, sparkling water; they come bubbling up from the depths without invitation or effort. Images, illustrations, comparisons, whole articulated trains of thought appear as by enchantment. In such moments of supreme intuition, when the sensibilities reach this pitch of activity, all sense of effort perishes. Speech is then mechanical, — ruled, inspired, filled by the mighty intensities. But we strike no igneous, liquid epochs as we tunnel through the crust of South's writings. He rises into heats and storms without

² South wrote several poems, which are to be found in his posthumous works. The only production of this kind which he himself gave to the public was called Musica Incantans, etc., in 1677. Curll says that he regretted the publication to the day of his death, "as a juvenile and unmomentary performance."

"1716-17 [Jan.] There are just published some posthumous things of Dr. South, in 8vo. They are printed by one Edm. Curll, an errant knave. This Curll was lately whipped by the Westminster school-boys for printing the speech that one of the school-boys made upon the funeral of Dr. South." — Reliquiæ Hearnæ (London, 1869,) Vol. II, pp. 43, 44. number, outlanguage in furious invective every man of his age except John Milton, yet we can always trace upon his pages the tug of effort, the resolute push of the will. There was little purely automatic movement in his mental action. Thoughts and emotions seem never to crowd and jostle upon him, impatient for utterance. Many of his sentences were disbranched and torn from his brain by sheer violence. We are anxious simply to discriminate. We have little inclination to dispraise these sermons because they lack the charm of spontaneity. No man can neglect constant and exacting industry, whatever the type or quality of his genius. When Mrs. Browning struck out "Lady Geraldine's Courtship" in a heat, or Sir William Hamilton dictated his lectures the evening before they were delivered, such inspirational and unlabored success was built on a firm basis of general study. While South's discourses, as a rule, betray individual effort, they are elaborately and conscientiously wrought by hand.

It always strikes us with fresh surprise that South should have reached an early maturity, yet such is the fact. There was no progressive ripening and fruitage of his powers.¹ The plane of his mental life rose with a scarcely perceptible grade. His sermon on "The Scribe Instructed," which first drew public attention towards him, was preached at the age of twenty-seven, and he hardly surpassed it² in the fifty-six years that followed. The philosophy of all this lies deeper than the accident of a congenial subject and a fortunate occasion. His nature was essentially conservative in its entire range; it resembled a lake with no outlet, rather than the flowing stream that pushes on to the sea, broadening and deepening as it advances. To the last his activity and application suffered no check. Curll writes that, "notwithstanding his ill state of health, he continued his wonted recourse to books and the improvement of his mind (which had a sufficient magazine of learning before) almost to the day of his death; and it was with great difficulty that his surgeon, who had the care of a sore leg two or three years since under hand, prevailed on him not to creep into his study too often, which yet he could not refrain."¹ But this tireless industry effected little except the maintenance of what was already in hand. Fearing the future and fighting against it, in a constant panic lest it should overthrow existing orders and institutions, he devoted himself to the arming and entrenching of the present. As might be anticipated, he was hostile to the great scientific movements of the times. He assailed the Royal Society in a speech at the dedication of the New Theatre in 1669, as "underminers of the university." Evelyn,² who heard the oration, thought the charge was "very foolish and untrue as well as unseasonable." It is not strange that a man who grasped what is so firmly that he was out of sympathy with what is to be, should exhibit no marked progress in his intellectual and spiritual life; that, as he came at an early age to a splendid mental development, he should have resolutely taken his post, and neither retreated from that line nor pushed beyond it.

² The majority of critics unite in pronouncing the sermon on "The Creation of Man in the Image of God," South's masterpiece, though Coleridge classes it among the specimens of "Rabbinical dotages," and the "Retrospective Review" declares that its excellences are "buried in the rubbish of bad metaphysics and puerile conceits."

"I am not the wiser for my age,
Nor skilful by my grief;
Life loiters at the book's first page, —
Ah, could we turn the leaf!"³

The root-power of South's preaching, without which, indeed, its unrivalled individuality would be of little moment, lay in its luminous, flashing sententiousness. A grand, realistic robustness of intellect shines through his sermons. Though, like a Swiss cottage, their framework is on the outside; though an atmosphere of measurement and precision clings to them, yet the movement is rapid and brilliant. The sentences, often sharpened into maxims, ring with a clear, trenchant pithiness; reflected and antithetic lights burn and flame along the line of their progress,—fires of indignant scorn and of sarcastic mockery. If genius is “an undefinable newness and unexpectedness,”¹ we find it without question in these discourses. South comes near to the essential essence of truth, irrespective of its word-vesture, and hence exhibits its inspiration and power at first hand rather than through the medium of other writers. We find, therefore, that his thought and expression continually break away from the old bed and cut new channels for themselves. Here the grasp of conservatism is broken and his freedom is pronounced. If at times there seems to be extravagance and over-wrought utterance, we are to remember that a tinge of infatuation runs in the veins of all real eloquence. It springs from the parentage of a fired sensibility. Its logic must be aflame, its narrative and appeal transfigured by passion. There is a native wildness in it that can never be fully tamed and domesticated into propriety.

With all his bristling, angular, rigid personality, South was capable of a vehement glow and fusibility of mental action. His words often flew out of great intensities, like sparks from a winter forge. No man has succeeded more happily in translating these inner heats into speech. Though the process was laborious, the success has been signal. He had at command marvellous resources of vigorous, wholesome, unhackneyed English. For the times, his style was wonderfully pure. Discarding the complicated diction fashionable in the pulpit of that day, he, in good measure, combined the rude, unschooled strength of the elder writers and the polish, the chastened grace, of Addison and his successors. He levied heavily upon the Saxon element of our tongue. No more than Shaftsbury could he see why a succession of “well-strung monosyllables might not be allowed to clatter after one another, like the hammers of a paper-mill, without any breach of music.”² Little débris of “gouty joints and darning work of whereunto, wherebys, thereof, therewiths, and the rest of this kind,”³—features in the contemporary pulpit that give great offence to M. Taine,—encumber his writings. His paragraphs are as perspicuous as a cloudless, mistless day in autumn. You are seldom bethumped with an idle surf of words.¹ He came quickly and decisively to the point, rarely making you "despair of your dinner," like Howe, "by the time he took in laying the cloth." Then there was the fascination of his courage—his defiant, reckless, tempestuous bravery—with which every sermon smoked. This trait stood pre-eminent in the furniture of his ideal prelate. "Though learning," he declares, "be his ornament, piety a necessary property, yet resolution is his very essence." He reached his greatest successes as well as satisfactions in attacking somebody. On all sorts of occasions he belabored Dissenters and stoned Puritans. He assailed Dr. Sherlock² with such fury that the king interfered and put an end to the controversy. He is the grand field-marshal of aggressive pulpit oratory. This shrewd abandon of declamation, this torrent of impetuous and daring assertion, this clarion emphasis of utterance, which gave him vast sway over an audience, is characteristically exhibited in a letter to the Earl of Rochester, soliciting his friendly offices in restoring him to the king's favor, which had been shadowed by a letter which he was charged with writing to Dr. Bathurst, "reflecting upon Mr. Walker, of Oxon." "And thus, my lord," writes South, "stands my case. I am cast off and slurred in the face of the whole kingdom for a letter that was never wrote, never received, and so no wonder if never produced. If it can, I will forfeit my neck to the gallows. And the king himself, upon the report of my absolute denial of it, was so gracious as to promise the Bishop of Durham that he would further inquire into it, and my accusers should either

² "Dr. South, a learned but ill-natured divine, who had taken the oaths, but with the reserve of an equivocal sense which he put on them, attacked Dr. Sherlock's book of the Trinity, not without wit and learning, but without any measure of Christian charity, and without any regard either to the dignity of the subject or the decencies of his profession."—Burnet's His Own Times (London, 1809). prove what they had said true or themselves liars. The former, I am sure, can never be done, and the latter I cannot yet hear declared."¹ He wore white on his sleeve, but fear never blanched his cheek. He compelled attention and applause by the force and brilliancy of his intellect, great not by any charm of person or of elocution,² — all the preachers, Addison tells us, being stiff and awkward, speaking like automaton in the pulpit. He exulted in strength, he had a quick and hearty admiration for triumphant power, while it must be confessed that weakness, incompetence, and failure found in him a cold and tardy sympathy. "If it is imaginable," he once broke out, "that there can be a misery greater than damnation, it is this — to be damned for being a fool!"

South was a witty man, too witty in the opinion of the "Retrospective Review" to be much loved, but this trait came prominently to the surface in his preaching and cannot be overlooked in any adequate estimate of it. It was an era of humorists, — the era of Dryden, penetrative but not malicious, striking at radical defects of character rather than external blemishes of person; of Swift, the sardonic philosopher, "whose truth frightens one, and whose laughter makes one sad"³; of Congreve, earthy, vain, biting, rounding out the present into his universe; of the classical Addison, a kindly satirist, campaigning against the foibles and minor offences of society; and of Pope, keen, sensitive, polished, remorseless. The wit of these men was eminently social and literary, while South's was strikingly oratorical, and displayed itself less congenially in the parlor or on the pages of a popular journal than in the exigencies of the forum. They were unrivalled in the club-room; in comedies that were to be put upon the boards; in poems, sketches, and essays that were to be read: but he was in his glory when he came before an audience and spoke. He was forensic, pitched to the key of public assemblies. Though often confined to the region of pure intellect, blazing and flashing there like a meteor, South's humor was far from the genial, hearty, or impersonal type. An ominous undertone snarled through his playfulness. At times amiable and the best of comrades, his moods readily changed, the sweetness was easily jangled and put out of tune.¹ "He tells the truth," said Cecil, "with the tongue of a viper." The grave Dr. Owens, his dean, thought that unquestionably he sat in the seat of the scornful. It struck some observers that he carried away from the Westminster school even more impudence and sauciness than learning. The memory of his enemies rarely slumbered. Curll naively remarks, in the innocence of his soul, that "notwithstanding he could readily forgive [he] could not forget an ill turn." Now he rains a drift of merciless invective upon his opponents; now he deals them a sharp, parenthetical thrust, and then passes along; or his satire relents, and shades into a pungent grotesqueness, as when he asks, "Can anything be so vile and forlorn as an old, broken sensualist creeping, as it were, on all fours to the devil?"

Wit always appears in the pulpit with a protest on the part

"Dr. South, I had forgot to say, upon the choice I gave him of going or not going [to visit the Turkish and Polish camps] had chosen the latter upon pretence of apprehending the inconveniences of the journey, which he said he had not a constitution to bear. . . . But when I returned, I found a visible alteration in the doctor's temper, whether it were that he was troubled he had not gone the journey when he saw us all come back alive, which, perhaps, he was afraid of; or whether he was dissatisfied the cook was not left behind to dress his victuals, or that another at least was not got, which I had not time to give order for, or whatever the hidden cause was—feeding upon his own ill-natured spleen for four days together. . . . And first, though he looked out of the window and saw me come in, I was above an hour in the house before he came down to me, and I sent at last to him. He came, but in much disorder, making short questions and sometimes as short answers, of all of which I endeavored to take as little notice as it was possible, making him excuses for not providing him a cook, but that I hoped he knew the difficulty of getting such a creature in this country, to which he answered well enough; but there was gall and bitterness round about, and I could not sweeten it and took no more pains. Quickly, after supper, he left me and I went to bed, my people telling me that both his man as well as he were mightily out of humor, and that when they were left alone, his man did usually beat him with some jealousy or tittle-tattle."—Ibid. Vol. I, p. 622.

While chaplain of the embassy to Poland, South could not be induced to read service according to the old style calendar of that country.

of many hearers.¹ But we can see no propriety in this restriction unless it is desirable to give the devil his choice in weapons. It seems to us that the preacher should put all his forces into the field, wit among them, if he happens to find it in his arsenal. It carries a force and magnetism which, in some respects, belong to no other forth-putting of the human mind. There may be risk, but all real power is dangerous, dangerous in exact proportion to its intensity. Sometimes it led South astray; sometimes he was blinded by the flare of his tropes, and left a fanciful analogy or a dexterous play upon words to meet the full shock of undeniable objections; yet it leavened and popularized his preaching, sharpened the blade of his logic, gleaming while it smote, transfixing vices which laugh in the face of stately argument. If men are nervously sensitive to ridicule, why should not their sins be occasionally treated with it? Who will silence the mocking of Elijah as the priests of Baal call upon their god?²

In point of theology South was decidedly orthodox. His doctrine is Calvinistic, though he detests the Calvinistic polity and stigmatizes it as "that quicksilver of Geneva." He gloried particularly in the dogma of a literal hell. It suited at

¹ "I have lately read some of South's sermons. I can't say they delight me. They deserve an epithet very unsuitable to that sort of writing, which is that they are diverting. It is below the dignity of religion to have it treated in that witty way. . . . But I will read more of Dr. South, and perhaps I may be reconciled to him."—Mrs. Delany, Autobiography. Vol. I, pp. 450, 451.

² Several of South's orations, as "Terræ Filius" are still extant, in one of which he gives Dr. Thomas Fuller "a most uncomplimentary notice."—See Bailey's, Life pp. 611-613.

"Dean Addison, when he was a young man at Queens, had his eye accidentally put out by a small bone flung at him in jest. He was Terræ Filius in the year 1657. Reflecting upon Dr. South in his speech, the doctor stood up and said, 'O monstrum, horrendum, ingens, cui lumen ademptum!'"—Reliquæ Hearnæ. Vol. I, p. 66.

"Having accepted an invitation to dine with a clerical friend, at whose house he had called for the purpose of paying a morning visit, his host, on stepping into an adjoining room, was severely upbraided by his wife for giving her the trouble of providing a repast for such a guest. An altercation ensued, which South overheard; and, at length the husband, in a violent passion, exclaimed, 'If the doctor were not so near at hand I would certainly give you a beating.' South immediately opened the door . . . exclaiming, 'I beg pardon, but don't let my presence be any impediment.' The lady, it is added, at once retired, and served up an excellent dinner, but did not think fit to appear at the table."—Georgian Era. Vol. IV, p. 633.

least the rhetorical exigencies of a man who hated intensely, and had troops of enemies, to believe in the existence of a place where the "sinner will fry eternally under the flame and fire of a condemning sentence," and where no future restoration, no "general jail delivery of the spirits in prison," can break the grasp of his miseries. Indeed, the Englishman of two centuries ago found a satisfaction in the execution of penal justice which we have lost. Parents took their households to Tyburn to see the Jonathan Wilds and Jack Sheppards — dashing heroes of the "gray mare and black vizards" — hung for sake of the moral effect of the spectacle.

Politically South was an extreme Royalist, and that bias tinged and flooded all his preaching. Whatever oscillations may have marked his early career, — whether his Latin ode in honor of Cromwell was simply an assigned exercise or spoke the verdict of a passing inclination; whether or not he seriously leaned for a time toward the dissidents and was an applicant for Baxter's curateship¹ at Kidderminster, — he finally settled into a most unqualified champion of the establishment. His savage enthusiasm never flags in panegyrics of the church and clergy. "One brazen wall, one diocesan bishop," he exclaims, "will better defend this enclosed garden of the church than five hundred shrubs, than all the quicksets of Geneva, than all the thorns and brambles of presbytery." He was an enthusiastic admirer of Laud, an indiscriminating eulogist of Charles I and his son.

This headstrong, resolute, imperious man, who would have gone to the Tower or laid his head upon the block in defence of his opinions; who would scarcely have hesitated to twist his official robes into halters for Dissenters, offers to royalty an absolute submission. To him the king was God's earthly regent. His theories of passive obedience were scarcely less positive than those of Dr. Mainwaring, who preached before Charles that resistance to his will would draw eternal damnation upon the offender. In all this infatuation of loyalty we do not question South's sincerity. He never wore a mask with any success; there was a hopeless transparency¹ in his stratagems; he could not run with the hare and hunt with the hounds. Vehemently outspoken and partisan, whatever he espoused, he espoused with his whole soul, moving altogether, like the cloud of the poet, if he moved at all. For the violence of South's language, we have no apology; but after having had occasion to read most that his enemies have left on record, we have reached the conclusion that the evidence spells out a summary of utter though uncomfortable honesty.² With him love transfigured its objects, as the village is glorified by the dust that rises from its streets when the afternoon sun falls aslant upon it.

Great as was South's success and popularity, he encountered occasional mortifications, one of which his not very cordial friend, Mr. Anthony à. Wood, has related³ with ill-disguised satisfaction: "Before or about the time he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts," Wood writes, "he was appointed to do some exercise in the public and spacious refectory of that house [Christ's Church], viz., to speak a speech upon some great and signal occasion. When he had prepared it, and made it proportionable to the transcendency of his parts and abilities, he gave out to several of his acquaintance that he intended in that speech severely to lash the sectaries of his house and of the university. This being known abroad, and the day whereon he was to perform what he had prepared being come, it occasioned a great concourse in the said refectory of the younger students, who were the greatest wits, but esteemed by the sectaries to be of the most profligate principles, both in that house and in other houses of the university. To satisfy all their expectations, our author South came forth and addressed himself, with a sufficient measure of confidence (whereof there was no want in him), to speak to this ingenious auditory. And, indeed, the whole scope of his oration was, if you will believe a rank fanatic, 'little other than the most blasphemous invective against godliness and the most serious and conscientious professors of it.' But before he had proceeded far in it, my author tells me that 'the hand of the Lord was stretched out against him, and he was suddenly surprised by such a qualm as did disturb him afterward at Whitehall.' . . . Wherefore, being constrained abruptly to break off, it was so great a discomfort to him that he was scarce able to bear it, because that, first, he esteemed himself a person of great fame in the university, and, secondly, that it would be a great disparagement to him among the wits of his acquaintance. However, this influence it had upon him, as was observed by some persons then living in the university, that 'from that time he lay under some conviction of the evil of abusing those good parts which God had given him in defaming those persons and things which the Lord doth testify His greatest approbation of'; and so from thenceforth he seemed to be much more serious than before."

¹ "After this, Dr. South had a great discourse with me of his unwillingness to return to Nemeguen, upon pretence of being out of clothes; but, in truth, the bottom was that he had a mind to be at home. I told him he should have my consent to do what he would, but I thought it not very decent to run away by himself, while it was yet very uncertain how little a while I might stay behind; at last I convinced him, but he would spend the time in seeing Holland, to which I was very free."—Clarendon's Correspondence and Diaries. Wood calls South "a false fellow" in his diary ("Lives of Lealand, Hearne, and Wood." Vol. II, p. 261). The cause of this hostility is said to have been one of South's sufficiently broad jests when Wood was detailing to him some of his physical ailments. Wood was very angry, and went home and wrote South's Life I!—See The Gentleman's Magazine, Vol. XXXI, p. 222.

Wood says that South passed his old age in "a discontented and clamorous condition for want of preferment," but there was no lack of propositions looking in that direction. The mischief sprang largely from the clashing of his tempestuous, unharmonized powers. It is a common experience with men of his stamp, humorists, satirists, wits. In the nature of the case, he could never have been very contented or happy. What he calls the "great evangelical virtue of patience," the milder, sunnier traits of passive excellence, were never pronounced in his career. His long life was one continuous struggle, with infrequent lulls, when the tumult ceased and the cowering birds, creeping forth from their coverts, broke into song. With all its wickedness, the age was alive with reformation and hope, but he had no part in the one and caught no inspiration from the other; the glow of sunrise was upon it, yet he felt only the chill of thickening night.¹

Less imaginative and splendid than Taylor, less logical and conclusive than Barrow or Chillingworth, less fervent and spiritual than Baxter, South surpassed all the preachers of his generation in the quality of a "fierce and witty eloquence." If his sermons are pugnacious, bristling with munitions of war, if they lack unction and persuasiveness, yet they are work-day discourses,² grappling with the great practical questions of life, sketching out the consequences of vice and virtue in characters that no man can mistake. Doubtless he is to be admired rather than loved. While we decline to live in the same house with him, we cheerfully take off our hat to him in the street. Though somewhat rough and coarse if closely inspected, like the statue designed for a cathedral pinnacle, yet when lifted beyond our familiarities, he takes on a grand proportion and symmetry.

He was celebrated for his learning and charity, and was pretty honest, considering he was a complier. He hath published many public works extant. He hath founded a school at Islip and endowed it forever. He was rector of that place as prebendary of Westminster. He spent the whole income of that rectory (as I have been informed) in charity. Dr. South died at Caversham, or Causham, near Reading, last Sunday morning, July 8th.

It was a grief to Swift, who coveted South's prebend, that he did not die sooner. The Earl of Halifax wrote him, Oct. 6, 1709, "Dr. South holds out still, but he cannot be immortal. The situation of his prebend would make me doubly concerned in serving you, and upon all occasions that shall offer I shall be your constant solicitor."—Swift's Works. Vol. XV, p. 349.

Let me hear concerning life, what the right notion is, and what I am to stand to upon occasion, that I may not, when life seems retiring or has run itself out to the very dregs, cry Vanity, condemn the world, and at the same time complain that life is short and passing."—Shaftsbury's Characteristics. CONGREGATIONAL STATISTICS OF ALL NATIONS.

THE star of the god Pan is in the ascendant. Pan-Presbyterianism engages the attention of a large and interested number of Presbyterians, and Pan-Episcopacy enlists the zeal and devotion of many good churchmen. Indeed, almost the only large body of Christians who have been supposed to have no right to use the word or cherish the thought of world-wide relations is the Congregationalists. Such is the emphasis which we put upon the local idea of the church, that Congregationalism has popularly been held as an agglomeration of atoms, and a "rope of sand" has been the familiar description of it. What can such atoms be to one another? What interest can they have in one another?

The QUARTERLY published in April, 1874, an article on this general subject. A note to that article, page 297, gave an approximate statement of the number of Congregational churches in the various countries. Recently the question has been raised whether more full and complete grouping of these statistics is not practicable. Our success in examining the subject has not been all that we could wish; so small, indeed, is the result beyond what was embodied in the note above mentioned as to give us increased respect for the diligence and care of our contributor, Rev. A. H. Ross. Still the results of our inquiry may be of interest, and by the very meagreness of the figures given may point the way to improvements to be hoped for in the future.

Our sources of information on this subject are:

- (1.) THE CONGREGATIONAL QUARTERLY, the annual summaries of which are far more full and accurate than any others.
- (2.) The Congregational Year Book, published by the Congregational Union of England and Wales.
- (3.) The Annual Reports of the London Missionary Society, the American Board, and the American Missionary Association.

Of the first we need not here speak.

The Year Book is a portly and handsome volume, which embodies a full record of the proceedings and addresses at the two meetings of the union each year, and the statistics, more or less (and usually less) complete, of all the Congregational churches of Great Britain, the colonies, the continent, and in short of all countries not included in this QUARTERLY. Here would seem to be a good basis for all we want in the line of ecumenical statistics, but it hardly proves so on trial.

In the English Year Book for 1875 is a paragraph referring to the QUARTERLY, which we cannot deny ourselves the pleasure of quoting, not merely for what it says of our annual statistics, but as suggesting its own deficiencies in the comparison. The editor (Rev. Robert Ashton, whose patient diligence and good taste are everywhere apparent) says :—

"The CONGREGATIONAL QUARTERLY is a publication of special interest and value to the denomination, and is worthy the attention and support of Congregationalists in Great Britain and the Continent of Europe.

"Its biographies and essays are admirably written, but its statistical information is beyond all praise for its fulness and accuracy. The editors complain, indeed, of the difficulty in obtaining correct and extended reports from many parts of the States. Our statistics, obtained often at great trouble and cost, will not bear comparison with those of the CONGREGATIONAL QUARTERLY. We have the indifference of some to statistics, and the conscientious scruples of more, and the suspicions of not a few to contend against; but the hope is cherished that these obstacles will, ere long, be removed out of the way, and full and copious returns will be made on all subjects of interest to the denomination."

We thank our brother for his kind words, and reciprocate heartily his hopes. When he is able to realize them, it will be a great gain to the forces of the body in Great Britain. We trust that not many years will pass before he can tell us in detail how many churches there are in the kingdom and her colonies, how many members they embrace, when their pastors were settled, and other items such as we in America have discovered the value of in our own country. When that day comes, tables embracing all Congregationalists can be made more full and instructive than it is possible to make them now.

In the table which follows, we assume that churches founded by Congregational missions are to be associated with Congregationalists. We do not affirm that these churches are in all cases fully Congregational. On minor points, their organization will vary widely, adapting itself to the peculiar circumstances of their growth. The merit of our system is emphasized in this, that it admits of such variations.

Our Presbyterian neighbors wisely enroll the churches of their missions in organic relations, having presbyteries of Oroomiah, Rio Janeiro, and Siam, and synods of China and India. We are surely not less entitled to include our missionary churches in any enumeration of our own, and that without taking issue with the venerable president of the American Board and other good men in the emphasis with which they affirm the catholic and undenominational character of the Board. We owe to these churches, and they owe to us, this "right hand of fellowship."

We follow the English Year Book in including the free evangelical churches of France, Belgium, Switzerland, and Italy, without any affirmation on our own part how far their structure is assimilated to ours, or whether the Waldensian and some others might not as properly be included.

We give in the foregoing tables the reported or approximate membership of 5,345 churches, which reaches 546,167, but take the precaution not to set these figures in the table, lest they be quoted as the whole number of Congregationalists, when, in fact, there are 2,474 churches of whose members no estimate is given. These include the great body of the British churches.

The Year Book reports only the membership of the churches in Wales and of a single county in England, Dorsetshire. The name we record here in honorable distinction and with a mild wonder to what favorable wind we are indebted for the figures of these 36 churches alone out of the 1,960 in England.

The average membership of all the reported churches is 102, within a very small fraction. If the average of the unreported churches is the same, and it is probably not less, the total membership of all the Congregational churches would be 797,504. In round numbers, it is not far from the truth to say there are 8,000 Congregational churches, with 800,000 members, in the world.

It is proper to explain how far some of these figures are, as stated, approximations only. The London Missionary Society reports the membership, but not the number of its churches. The Year Book gives the whole number of churches as about 300. This number we have adopted, and divided it among the different missions in proportion to the number of missionaries. The details, of course, will be slightly erroneous, but the aggregate will be as nearly correct as the Year Book's information.

So with Madagascar. The same authority reports the members, but not the number of churches. The latter we estimate.

The figures respecting the United States vary slightly from those given in the QUARTERLY for January, 1876, because they include the Indians.

The results of our investigations, if not wholly satisfactory, at least inspire us with hope.

CONGREGATIONAL NECROLOGY.

REV. DAVID SANFORD died in Medway, Mass., Dec. 17, 1875. He was born Aug. 28, 1801, in Medway, Mass. His father, Philo Sanford, was the second son of Rev. David Sanford, of West Medway. His mother was Lydia Whiting, daughter of Mr. Nathaniel Whiting, who came from Wrentham with a brother, Mr. Nathan Whiting, some years before the Revolutionary war. His grandfather, Rev. David Sanford, was chaplain in that war. The subject of this sketch, at the age of thirteen, entered the store of Lyman, Tiffany, & Co., and after one year became clerk in his brother's store, Mr. Sewall Sanford, and continued with him until 1818, when he removed to New York to occupy a similar situation in an older brother's store for one year. During that year he became personally interested in his spiritual welfare, and, under the preaching of Dr. Gardiner Spring, experienced a change by which he was led to enter the Christian course, and after a short period decided to give his life to the work of the gospel ministry. To accomplish this, he returned home to his native place, and pursued a course of study preparatory to college, and entered Brown University in September, 1821, graduating in 1825. He at once commenced a course of theological study with Dr. Ide, which he continued at Andover until 1828, when Divine Providence indicated, by the convictions and advice of brethren in the ministry, that his duty was to enter a destitute field as pioneer in the work of preaching the gospel. That field was New Market, N. H. He was ordained May 28, 1828, and July 22, 1828, was married to Sarah Parkhurst Daniels, of Hopkinton, daughter of Mr. Obed and Mrs. Sarah P. Daniels. She died Jan. 2, 1860. They had nine children, of whom seven survive.

When at New Market, during the years 1828, 1829, and 1830, Mr. Sanford labored with that people to secure means to erect a house of worship, and borrowed money to fulfil contracts, which, added to other pecuniary embarrassments, became so great a burden as to require him to seek a position of less sacrifice of means. Such a position was presented by a request from the village church in Dorchester, where he was installed as pastor, July 19, 1830, and where he remained until 1838, when his health was prostrated.

In this condition he yielded to the requests of the people in Medway, Mass., to engage in a new enterprise. With an enfeebled state of health, he continued to labor until 1871, when he felt unwilling to sustain longer the responsibilities of the pastorate, and asked to be relieved from active service in the public duties of his office. The church and people kindly came forward to release him, and also to grant an annuity ordinarily furnished under such circumstances. This annuity, together with the kindness of his eldest son and his nephew and other personal friends, furnished him with means of support. In all he could see the hand of God most strikingly.

Mr. Sanford was married, a second time, to Mrs. Adeline Davis Patrick, March 19, 1861, — a worthy woman, who nursed him with great care, and who still survives him.

The writer's acquaintance with Mr. Sanford commenced in college and continued during his long life. In college he was sprightly, always cheerful, a fair scholar, and the favorite of his class. But it was his piety, his active devotion to Christ, that peculiarly distinguished him. In the prayer-meeting and social conference, in the theological society, in personal conversation with those without, and in Sabbath-school labors he abounded. Every Sunday he passed through the city to Oneyville to teach a class of poor children and young men, several of whom were converted through his efforts. When at Andover, the same devotion to the Master led him often to walk ten miles on Saturday afternoon to Lowell, then a small village, to be present at a meeting in the evening, and to labor on the Sabbath. He may be said to have been the leading spirit in that great revival which commenced in the early settlement of that city, and which continued during three years, till hundreds were brought into the kingdom.

During one of his summer vacations he visited a manufacturing village in Connecticut, and labored so faithfully that, when his vacation expired, a petition, numerously signed by persons of various denominations, was sent to the professors at Andover, requesting that he might remain a longer time with them; and though this was against the rules of the Seminary, yet so urgent was the request and so cogent were the arguments, that the petition was granted, and at the end of three months a church was organized there of over sixty members.

He was equally successful as a pastor at New Market and Dorchester; but in neither of these places were his labors confined to his own parish. He was ever doing good among his brethren in the surrounding vicinity; and the now flourishing church in Quincy might never have existed but for his active service in starting it at the same time that he commenced his work in Medway, where he was pastor thirty-seven years.

The Lord graciously affixed His seal to the new enterprise at Medway. Immediately there were tokens of His special presence. In connection with the preaching of the gospel, and Sabbath school, the Holy Spirit moved upon the hearts of the people; one after another began to inquire the way to Christ, until those of every age, from threescore years and ten down to twelve, were found among the hopeful disciples of Christ. As fruits of this work, sixty were added to the church in the first year of his ministry. During no year of one-third of a century did the time pass without some accession to the church. Within this period there were some four or five seasons of special blessing. The last was in 1848, when some seventy or more were deeply interested, fifty of whom made an open profession of faith in Christ.

During his ministry here it pleased the Lord to add four hundred and one to the original thirty-four members. Of the members of this church, one hundred and fifteen removed from the town, and among them were ministers, teachers, physicians, missionaries, and others in various departments of active life, who went forth to do good and shine as lights in the world.

He loved the truth and loved to preach it. He was one of the early antislavery advocates among the ministers. He highly valued the gospel ministry, and would not have left it for any other office or profession.

He often spoke of the daughter who became a foreign missionary, and expressed gratitude to God who had given him a child for this honored work.

In him was fulfilled the declaration of God, "Them that honor me, I will honor," for he was often appointed by his brethren to represent them and the church at general associations and conventions. He died as he had lived, "a good man and a just," filled with the Holy Spirit, and his last words were, "This is the beginning of the everlasting life."

W. M. C.

REV. SETH WILLARD SEGUR was born in Chittenden, Rutland County, Vt., Dec. 24, 1831. When he was but a few months old his parents removed to Pittsfield, Vt. At the age of twelve years he gave his heart to Christ, and united with the Congregational Church in Pittsfield at the age of fifteen. He fitted for college at Royalton Academy, graduated from Middlebury College in 1859, and completed his theological course at Auburn Seminary (N. Y.) in 1862. He was married, Sept. 13, 1859, to Miss Ellen Blossom, of Pittsfield, Vt. He was licensed to preach by the Royalton Association May 8, 1861. Was ordained to the Christian ministry May 28 the same year by a council called by the church of which he was a member. He was installed over the Congregational Church in Tallmadge, Ohio, June 8, 1862. He was dismissed from the pastorate of this church April 30, 1871. During this pastorate of nine years (lacking one month) one hundred and thirty-four persons were received to the membership of the church, eighty-eight of them by profession. Baptisms, eighty-nine children and fifteen adults.

His second settlement was at Gloucester, Mass., where he was installed June 14, 1871, and dismissed Feb. 13, 1873. On May 7 the same year, he was installed over the Congregational Church in West Medway. It was here that the writer made his acquaintance. He preached Christ truly, and made Him the theme of his discourses to an extent unusual. He was a practical temperance man, not only in speeches, sermons, but in labors. He literally took the inebriate by the hand, raised him up, fed, counselled, and guarded him, paid his fines, and appealed to the deepest convictions of his heart. In this he was a rare, a very rare man. His elocution in the pulpit was easy, graceful, and very pleasant. He was eminently a peace-maker; he understood how to move along with the discordant elements of society with wondrous skill and success. His sermons were full of sympathy for the sinful and sorrowing, and yet no truth was compromised and no vital point evaded. He had a shade of reticence, which led persons of partial acquaintance with him to misapprehend him. His business qualities and his mechanical skill were proved to be of a high and leading order while repairing the church and building the chapel at West Medway. The latter edifice will be viewed as built with Mr. Segur as the architect. He was an excellent and accurate singer, and most enthusiastic on the subject of sacred music. He was a man thoroughly loyal to his convictions, and however trying the ordeal, he trod the path of duty and aggressive faithfulness. He once said to the writer, "I shall preach the truth, whatever may be the consequences." While on a visit to Tallmadge, Ohio, attending the semi-centennial of the church over which he was first installed, he was taken sick with the typhoid fever, and died Sept. 24, 1875, and was buried at this his early ministerial home. He was greatly beloved by his former people, as well as by the church and congregation at West Medway.

A friend from Wisconsin thus writes of him: "He was a man and a minister of true, solid worth, with no thorns of any kind about him anywhere. He was what he seemed to be, — no airs, no assumption, no cant, but an humble, hearty, devoted, self-forgetting man of God, a good minister of Jesus Christ."

Mrs. MELANCIA BOWKER STORRS was born in Fitzwilliam, N. H., Sept. 7, 1803, and died in Amherst, Mass., Nov. 20, 1875. She was the daughter of Charles and Beulah (Stone) Bowker. In addition to the advantages which the country schools of New England offered to the children three-quarters of a century ago, she, for a time, enjoyed the instruction of Mary Lyon at Ipswich.

She early united with the Congregational Church in her native town, of which Father Sabin, an original character, who died in 1845, was the pastor.

For successive seasons she taught in the common schools of her neighborhood with marked success, until her marriage with Dr. George Newell, of Petersham, Mass., July 17, 1831. But three months of watching with her husband, who was a confirmed invalid at the time of the marriage, left her a widow.

The intervening time, until her marriage with Rev. John Storrs, March 2, 1834, was mostly spent as preceptress in Monson Academy. Mr. Storrs was at that time supplying a pulpit in Norwich, Conn., and also acting as principal of a female seminary in that city. Mrs. Storrs undertook at once the double duties of assistant in the seminary and of pastor's wife in the varied work of the parish.

In 1836, Dec. 20, Mr. Storrs was called to the pastorate of the Congregational Church in Holliston, Mass. For the six ensuing years Mrs. Storrs did her full share to make the ministry of the Word a success among the people.

In 1842 Mr. Storrs accepted an invitation to act as agent of the American Bible Society for the State of Connecticut. Five years later he accepted a call to supply the Congregational Church at Middleboro' Four Corners, Mass., — a relation which continued some two years.

In 1849 Mr. Storrs was settled over the First Congregational Church in Winchendon, Mass. Here, seconded in every good work by his wife, he abounded in labor until his sudden death in 1854. Of their seven children, two died in infancy. The widow was left with five children, the eldest of whom was but sixteen years of age, and the whole amount of their property could hardly have exceeded $2,000.

The future at that moment, to one less courageous and hopeful and full of faith than Mrs. Storrs, must have been dark indeed. Educated herself and highly cultivated, the dream of her life had been to, give to her sons and daughters the best advantages of the schools; but with her income cut off, and with the whole burden of support resting upon her, how could she do this?

For two years she waited and prayed before her plans were matured and she was ready to make the venture ; but having purchased a little homestead in Amherst, Mass., in the spring of 1856 she removed thither and entered upon the serious work of educating her children. How she was to carry three sons through the college and two daughters through the seminary at Norton her friends could not tell, nor could she explain it by any logic except that of faith. Her eldest son, Col. S. J. Storrs, graduated in the class of 1860 ; her youngest, Prof. H. E. Storrs, in the class of 1864 ; and her second son, Capt. C. L. Storrs, in the class of 1867. Her first and second sons did good service for their country in the war of the Rebellion. Her two daughters, in the mean time, accomplished the full course in Wheaton Female Seminary, and now, filling stations of usefulness and honor, these sons and daughters "rise up and call her blessed."

Mrs. Storrs combined in herself singular graces of person, of mind, and of heart. She possessed rare dignity and beauty, superior intellectual ability, great force of will, strength and depth of affection, and a sweetness of manners which threw a charm over all she did. She was a Puritan of the Puritans, and ordered her house in the fear of the Lord. She had led all her children to Christ in their early youth, and she lived to see them members of a Congregational church ; and, not unnaturally, when she saw this double education accomplished, she felt that her life-work was done.

The long struggle, though borne so bravely, had told upon her health, and she began to falter. A sense of weariness compelled her to confess the need and sweetness of rest. A troublesome cough had followed her for a number of years, but no fatal result was anticipated until a sudden cold brought on the crisis which ended her life. She died as she had lived, in the faith of her Saviour, surrounded by loving children and devoted friends. Her life, so broad, so pure, so sweet, so deep, will be had in everlasting remembrance. The weary child has reached her Father's house, and has before her all eternity in which to rest.

LITERARY REVIEW.

THEOLOGICAL AND RELIGIOUS.

THE Sermons on Gospel Themes,¹ by President Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin, is a volume of 417 pages. We cannot better set forth the circumstances attending the origin of this book than by copying the opening sentences of the Preface, from the pen of Prof. Henry Cowles, D. D., under whose care the volume was prepared. He says, "These sermons were preached by President Finney, at Oberlin, during the years 1845-1861, and reported from his lips by myself. In taking these reports I aimed to give the heads of the sermons and all the important statements verbatim, to retain always the substance of thought, and especially to seize upon the illustrations and present their essential points. Taken down in a species of short-hand, they were subsequently written out, and in every case read to President Finney, in his study, for any corrections he might desire, and for his indorsement. Consequently, these reports present truthfully the great doctrines preached, and in good measure, it is believed, the method and manner of his preaching."

These sermons are twenty-four in number, on such topics as "The Wages of Sin," "On Refuges of Lies," "Moral Insanity," "Conditions of being Saved," "On the Atonement," "Converting Sinners a Christian Duty," etc. The opening paragraph of the volume will recall to all who were wont in past years to hear Mr. Finney, his crisp, sharp, incisive method. "Sin is the most expensive thing in the universe. Nothing else can cost so much. Pardoned or unpardoned, its cost is infinitely great. Pardoned, the cost falls chiefly on the great atoning Substitute; unpardoned, it must fall on the head of the guilty sinner."

From the general conditions under which these sermons were preached at Oberlin, covering, as they do, a range of sixteen years, the reader has a far better opportunity to estimate the various powers of the distinguished preacher than in a series of purely revival sermons. This volume will do nothing, in our judgment, to impair, but will rather enhance the impression that Mr. Finney was a man strong, original, and, in his own domain, a master. He had not all gifts, but he has left behind a record that will not soon be forgotten. The most living part of that record, which will stretch on into eternity, is found in souls redeemed and consecrated through the power of those "gospel themes" which he effectually handled. In the thirteenth sermon he treats a subject which is, in its very nature, a delicate one, but which lies near the heart of theology. Some will read that sermon and not agree with it, at least, in all its parts; but in "vindicating the ways of God to man," some such view as the one here given seems to us essential in order to bring the full power of the gospel to bear upon the sinner's conscience.

Dr. Cowles, the compiler, deserves a hearty word of commendation for his part in giving us this volume. The sentences we have quoted from the Preface will reveal the fact that his labor has not been small, though it has been a labor of love.

WE have also received a volume of sermons from the late Dr. James Walker, president of Harvard College, entitled Reason, Faith, and Duty.¹ We will not say that these sermons differ from those of Mr. Finney as widely as Oberlin College differs from Harvard, yet the contrast between them is very marked. These discourses of Dr. Walker are, nevertheless, of a high order of excellence. There is almost nothing here which can give offence to the most evangelical mind, or which could indicate to the reader that they came from a man known as a Unitarian. Those who used to hear Dr. Walker preach will not be surprised at this. His discourses were always weighty with Christian truth, but not controversial. The brief notice at the opening of the volume will reveal some facts connected with its origin, which will also throw light on Dr. Walker's character.

"The revered author of these discourses should not be held responsible for their publication. Long since he gave to the flames far the greater part of his unpublished sermons. After repeatedly refusing the friend to whom he had given the scanty remnant the privilege of publishing a portion of them, he allowed his scruples to be in a measure overcome at the time of their last interview."

As in the case of Mr. Finney's, so the titles of these sermons will give a general clew to their range and design. "Religion not a Science, but a Want," "Man's Competency to know God," "Spiritual Death," "On keeping the Promises we make to Ourselves," "Jesus Christ made Perfect through Suffering," "He knew what was in Man," "Am I not in Sport?" "On the Sin of being led Astray," "The Power of Christ's Resurrection,"—these are but a few of the titles. The sermons are twenty-six in number. The opening sentence of the sermon last given in the enumeration above is as clear and strong as any Christian can demand: "The corner-stone of Christianity, considered as an historical religion, is Christ's resurrection."

We do not mean to imply that Dr. Walker would have been one with us on all questions pertaining to Christ and the evangelical faith. Doubtless there are points of divergence which we should hold to be of very great importance; but as far as our knowledge of the man goes, he did not seek to present points controversial and divisive, but rather those broad truths in which Christian people, of every name, would generally be agreed. And certainly in these days of radicalism, such sermons as these have a most wholesome sound. There is only this to be said by way of adverse criticism: Every man, and especially every religious leader, ought to be so thoroughly grounded in all the doctrines of Scripture as to leave no loop-hole out of which radicalism can logically come; but we cannot say that the author of these discourses has shown himself in this light in the volume before us.

REV. J. G. D. STEARNS, Congregational minister at Clearwater, Minn., has given us a book on the Meaning and Power of Baptism,¹ which merits more than a formal notice. No one can read the book without discovering the marks of long and careful labor. Though a clear line of argument and opinion runs through it, yet perhaps the greatest value of the volume is found in the fact that it brings within a reasonable range, and in a shape for easy reference, the best authorities, ancient and modern, on all sides of the question. It is comforting to know that a State so far distant and so new as Minnesota can give facilities for such an extended compilation; or if the needful books were not near at hand, then the author is more to be commended for the difficulties which he had to overcome in reaching his authorities: for the authorities have been reached and quoted from, with careful regard to volume and page. There are doubtless multitudes in our land who could read this volume through from beginning to end, and still think that a man or woman who has not been taken to some lake or stream, or to some meeting-house with the needful arrangements, and put completely under the water and taken out again, has not been baptized; but with the light which this volume sheds, we cannot possibly understand by what process of reasoning such a conclusion could be reached.

THE MESSRS. CARTER give us a fresh volume of pulpit discourses,² preached before the New York Avenue Church and congregation, Washington, D. C., by Dr. Samuel S. Mitchell, the pastor. It is a neat volume of 236 pages, and contains thirty-six sermons, selected by a hearer and published by request.

There was a time a few years since when it was often said that it was useless to publish sermons, that, with very rare exceptions, nobody would buy or read them; but of late it has come to pass that they are constantly reported by the daily and weekly press, and are found among other forms of popular literature published in volumes for the trade. It is fair to conclude that they have come to be in demand, and, notwithstanding the vast amount of attractive matter issued, are now both bought and read. These facts would seem to disprove the assertion, so often made, that the pulpit is losing its power. It is plain that either readers have become more easily pleased with what is weak and dull, or the utterances of the pulpit have become richer and more worthy of attention. If the latter,—which we have no doubt is the truth,—then the power of the pulpit has not diminished but increased. Fewer singularly great preachers may perhaps be found at present than at some other periods; but the average merit of pulpit discourses was probably never as great as it is to-day. The higher culture of the Christian ministry is bearing its legitimate fruits.

Dr. Mitchell's topics are various and appropriate to the ends of pulpit instruction. So far as we have observed, the tone of the volume is throughout evangelical and healthful. The discussions are not philosophical and subtle, nor formally theological, but abound with strong practical thought. The style has decided merits; it is clear, terse, sententious, and expresses the thought of the writer in the plainest and most unequivocal manner. There are no circumlocutions and no words wasted. We know nothing of Dr. Mitchell's manner in the delivery; but if he enunciates his sentences with distinctness and force, no hearer can miss his meaning, and every thought must seem to stand by itself and make its own impression. We incline to think that his fondness for vigor and point is indulged to some excess. A perpetual succession of short sentences is liable to produce a monotonous impression, unless the voice of the speaker is managed with extraordinary skill. In a few instances, expressions are used which, however idiomatic and forcible, approach too near to coarseness and grate somewhat on the ear. Still, we commend the volume as a specimen of good practical preaching; as earnest, thoughtful, and convincing. The sermons doubtless kept the hearers awake, and the reader will not find it easy to nod over them, unless himself particularly dull.

It has been greatly to the advantage of several modern writers on Scriptural characters that they have been personally acquainted with the localities, or with many of them, referred to in their respective narratives. It gives great power to description when a writer can call up what he himself saw at Jerusalem, Hermon, Mt. Lebanon, or at the Jordan or the Dead Sea. The author of *Footsteps of St. Peter*¹ has vastly increased the attractiveness of his narrative by having himself followed the footsteps of the eminent apostle.

Our author, Dr. Macduff, has given not a few valuable books to the public, some forty or more, large and small, but none more valuable than the one under notice. With great graphic power he presents us with the varied scenes of the apostle's life, illustrated and made vivid by remarkably striking descriptions of the cities and other localities which called for notice in the progress of the narrative. With no attempt to parade his learning, our author shows great familiarity with sacred literature having any reference to his subject. His quotations are numerous, and show great skill and judgment on his part in calling others to aid him in his work. The perusal of this volume is certain to present the reader with new and striking views of one of the most interesting and instructive characters of the Scriptures; and it is a chief excellence of the book that, in the relation borne to the fallen but recovered Peter by the Lord Jesus Christ, the Saviour's own character comes out into wonderful clearness and impressiveness, so that, while Simon son of Jonas is in the foreground, the infinite Benefactor of Peter is seen in such attractiveness as forcibly to suggest his own appeal, as a personal one to the reader, "Lovest thou me?"

Romish assumptions and claims in regard to the supremacy of Peter as a divinely constituted pope are handled with great vigor and very effective reasoning, and that stupendous fabric of the papal hierarchy crumbles into dust under the sturdy Scotchman's powerful blows.

This volume gives a striking illustration of that sovereign grace by which a poor, illiterate fisherman of an obscure province of the Roman Empire was raised to be a most important pillar in the kingdom of the Redeemer, and, through his character and writings, one of the great benefactors of the human race.

WE have recently received two additional volumes of Dr. Lange's great work on the Bible.¹ They belong to the series on the Old Testament, and are numbered VII and XIII. In the first of these volumes there are two hundred and seventy-eight pages devoted to an exposition of the two books of Chronicles. This commentary was written by Dr. Otto Zöckler, and translated, enlarged, and edited by James G. Murphy, LL. D. Then follow one hundred pages on the book of Ezra, prepared by Fr. W. Schultz, and translated by Rev. Dr. Charles A. Briggs; sixty-two pages on Nehemiah, by Rev. Howard Crosby, D. D., LL. D., and ninety-six pages on the book of Esther, by Dr. Schultz, translated by Prof. James Strong, D. D. In the second of these volumes there are four hundred and ninety-two pages on Ezekiel, prepared by Fr. Wilhelm Julius Schröder, of Prussia, translated by Patrick Fairbairn, D. D., and William Findlay, aided by Rev. Thomas Crevar and Rev. Sinclair Manson, and two hundred and seventy-three pages on the prophet Daniel, prepared by Dr. Zöckler, and translated by Prof. Strong.

The ponderous character of these works precludes our analysis of them or any attempt at a detailed specification of their qualities. They belong to a series which has secured already a wide-spread reputation as an exhibition of extensive learning and of critical scholarship. Although the idiomatic style of these writings may not always suit the taste of American scholars, yet this voluminous commentary will be prized as a vast storehouse of Biblical knowledge from which every scholar will delight to draw materials in expounding the Scriptures and in enforcing the practical truths which they contain.

HISTORICAL AND BIOGRAPHICAL.

A FEW years ago Vambrey's book on Central Asia was hailed in the West with almost an ovation. The very names that filled it were charmed names to most of us. Oxus and Jaxartes, Samarkand and Kashgar, belonged to romance and memory. Of them, as present facts in this modern world, we had little idea. Since then the mists have been gradually clearing from these forgotten regions. Russian advances, the war with Khiva, and British Indian interests have attracted and held attention. The telegraph has reached the waters of the Jaxartes, and items from Khiva and Bukhara are read in London and New York dailies. If any illusion remains, Mr. Schuyler's very sensible and matter-of-fact prose, in his Notes of a Journey in Russian Turkestan, Khokand, Bukhara, and Kuldja, will dissipate it.² Not that he is insensible to the haunted atmosphere around him,— the very first inhabitant of the land whom he meets is a certain Prince Tchinghiz, directly descended from the Genghis Khan of our school-books, and his pages abound in Oriental legends and histories ; but the atmosphere does not obscure his judgment nor affect his opinions : he gains the reader's confidence, and is already accepted as authority on the present state of Turkestan.

Without examining these bulky volumes in detail, we wish to call attention to some topics upon which they throw light.

Mr. Schuyler is a good linguist, and gives us much valuable information concerning the speech of Central Asia. The Turkish tribes, from the Bosphorus to the Chinese deserts, speak one language. There are the differences in pronunciation natural among illiterate peoples, but the Stam-boulli is readily understood in the bazaars of Samarkand. The Turkish, enriched as it is from the Arabic and Persian, will introduce the future missionary, who journeys by way of the Black Sea, to all the tribes he will encounter, till his brother, coming from the great wall of China, meets him in the shadows of the Altai Mountains.

The work also gives considerable space to the condition of Islamism at its head, as Central Asia is called. The Moslems here belong chiefly to the two earliest sects, and exceed in ignorance and intolerance. Dervishes swarm everywhere. The Kuran and its commentaries are the civil as well as religious law. The people will endure misrule and oppression to almost any extent from their native rulers, if the letter of the Kuranic law is observed ; but they are furious when receiving privileges, if that letter is violated.

Mr. Schuyler thinks, however, that great indifference to religion exists, that the observation is formal, and finds that, wherever the Russians have abolished compulsory attendance, the mosques are thinly attended. Still Islam controls the literature, the laws, the thoughts, the customs of the people ; its spirit is fatalistic, exclusive, anti-progressive ; its social doctrines have made Moslem society to the last degree foul and corrupt, and any reform must begin with the faith.

Mr. Schuyler supposes improvement must come from within, and commends Russia's hostility to missions. Perhaps he can tell us how this is possible. Has he ever heard of moral and intellectual light generated by spontaneous combustion ?

This journey confirms previous testimony as to the vigor of the Turkish nomadic tribes. While in the cities of Central Asia, as at Constantinople, the ruling families have degenerated physically, mentally, and morally, it is not so with the nomads. They still possess the vigor and energy that have founded successive Eastern empires, and as often sent dismay and terror to Western courts. In the Khivan campaign the Turkomans fought resolutely against the Russian invaders ; and when a strong force was sent to devastate their villages with fire and sword, the enraged Yomuds surprised and nearly succeeded in destroying it. With such warriors as these for a defence, united and vigorous counsels on the part of the many little states of Central Asia would soon check the progress of advancing Cossacks ; but petty jealousies and rival interests have made an open path to the Hindu Kush.

One possibility, indeed, the writer of these Notes, like others who have studied the question, predicts, — a revival of Islam. Should such a revival ever become wide-spread, it may be well to remember that the Constantinopolitan does not represent his race ; that there are vigorous multitudes of Turks, both along the Armenian highlands and in the steppes of Turkestan ; that in either place is material for larger armies than sufficed to carry the Prophet's green banner to its present resting-place by the Golden Horn.

The facts and remarks in this work concerning Russian administration in Asia are especially timely and interesting. The writer speaks well of the intentions of some of the officials, but hints that there is at the root of much of the administration "an innate incapacity to understand the basis of personal liberty and of the rights of property." (Page 302.) The maximum of interference seems to characterize Russian rule. There is a general ignorance of the character and language of the subject people. Here, as in other parts of the empire, the government assumes to decide for the subject many matters which Western governments leave to individual choice. Some of the interferences are remarkable, as when an entire tribe of Shamanists were mistaken for Moslems, furnished with mosques and immams, and converted to the faith of the Kuran !

The subject of Russian atrocities in Asia, deliberate and cold-blooded, the result of written orders from the governor-general, is attracting no little attention in Europe. Mr. Gladstone, who has shown just indignation at the barbarities of Bushibozooks, seems very unwilling to believe the fact of these outrages beside the Aral. Leaving him to investigate them at his leisure, we may be permitted to ask what capacity the Czar has shown to manage Mohammedan people and thus to interfere in Ottoman affairs.

The five and one-half million slaves of Turkey are willing to accept self-government from the Czar, but are very jealous of Russian control. The six million Armenians and Greeks are anxious for privileges ; but the first would fight for the Moslem sooner than for the Russ, and the latter always mistrusts the Russ. With Mohammedans, of whom there are sixteen millions in Turkey proper, the autocrat has no skill. He has exhibited great ignorance, stupidity, or indifference in regard to their characteristics in Central Asia. What more can we expect on the borders of Europe ? Enlightenment and progress must reach the individual and be associated with some individual freedom. All Russian progress is governmental and arbitrary. Thanks to Western governments, there is greater personal liberty on the southern shores of the Black Sea than on the northern. Enlightened governments can control the Sultan, and secure reform ; but who can control the Czar ? Whatever other changes may be in store for the city of Constantine, may Russian bureaus and bayonets be mercifully averted !

IN the QUARTERLY for October, 1875, p. 594, we noticed the issue of Vol. VI of Dr. Merle d'Aubigné's History of the Reformation in Europe in the Time of Calvin. It will be remembered that the work of editing that part of his History which the distinguished author left in manuscript was committed to his son-in-law, Pasteur Adolphe Duchemin, and Prof. E. Binder of the Theological College of Geneva. This new instalment, Vol. VII, of which we gave a brief notice in our October number, 1876, p. 609, does not exhaust the matter placed in their hands. One more volume remains to be published, and that will complete the series.

In the Preface to this seventh volume,¹ M. Duchemin briefly replies to some criticisms that have been made on the general character of history as a whole and in particular on the volume last published. His words are to the purpose, and at the same time are marked by moderation and candor. It would be a miracle if a narrative embracing so vast a number of persons and events were wholly accurate at every point, and if especially it did not on particular subjects come into unpleasant collision with the personal prejudices and opinions of many. The eminently picturesque and popular style of Dr. Merle did manifestly, at the outset, dispose some readers to doubt his thoroughness, but this distrust was soon seen to be without just ground. The evidences of most extensive research and painstaking accuracy appeared on every page, as the work advanced, in the ample citation of authorities, and few historical writers have proved themselves more worthy to be relied on.

This volume opens with a continuation of Book XI, relating to Calvin and the principles which governed his course as a reformer. This portion covers the recall of this great man to Geneva, and his return and labors down to February, 1542. Book XII treats of the origin and development of the Reformation in the Scandinavian countries, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden. The character, labors, and sufferings of John Tausen; the accession and reign of Frederic I, styled "The Peaceful," during whose administration the evangelical cause triumphed in spite of the bishops; the invasion of Norway by Christian II, and his failure and imprisonment; the vigorous reign of Christian III, and the eventful career of Gustavus Vasa: these and the connected events are described with all the graphic power of the writer's earlier years; every page is aglow with interest. The same may be said of Book XIII, which narrates the rise and progress of the Reformation in Hungary, Poland, Bohemia, and the Netherlands. The whole period seems to live and move before the eyes of the reader. D'Aubigné has never probably been surpassed: he has rarely been approached, we believe, in the power of rapid, animated, and yet clear and distinct historical narration. Each new volume has seemed to deepen the impression of his combined fidelity and skill. It is a matter of devout thankfulness that a long life was given him in which to execute his great work, which will stand as his enduring monument.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ALL who are interested in natural history will welcome the stately and elegant volumes on The Geographical Distribution of Animals,¹ recently given to the public by Alfred Russel Wallace. This work is the result of patient research and of plodding toil for years. Its design is to give accurate knowledge of groups of birds, of insects, of land animals, etc., and of their geographical distribution, and thus throw light on the condition of the islands and continents of different epochs, and increase our knowledge of the history of the earth. It does not furnish light reading, nor is it intended for entertainment. Its scientific character gives it value, and students will appreciate its worth. The maps and illustrations add to the interest with which its pages will be studied, and the index, at the close of each volume, increases its value as a book of reference.

A NEW edition of the *Meditations of Marcus Aurelius*² has just been issued. These Meditations are worthy of the attention which they have so long received. Their author was the best of the Antonine kings. For the era in which he lived he was a great philosopher as well as a conscientious, prudent sovereign. The books of his maxims and morals, of which there are twelve, have commanded the admiration of scholars of all lands for seventeen centuries. Though a Roman, he wrote in Greek, the tongue of literature in that age, and from that time to this frequent translations have appeared in many different languages. It is said that fourteen different editions appeared in the fifteenth century within fifty years. One Thomas Gataker became so convinced of the universality of the principles contained in these wise sayings that he wrote a commentary upon them, — a huge volume, of unwieldy shape, bound in vellum, published during the seventeenth century.

Dr. Farrar in his volume Seekers after God, has a delightful essay on the life and thoughts of Marcus Antoninus. He styles the book "the purest and noblest work of antiquity." The present edition was undertaken by the late Prof. Geo. Long, for his own enjoyment and use. When it was published, after many years and contrary to his first intention, he prefixed a graphic sketch of the life of Marcus Aurelius, and a brief but interesting history of the rise of the stoic philosophy.

These essays and the twelve books of the maxims make up the volume now before us. The life-thoughts of any earnest and great man, who has lived in an important period of the world's history, are full of interest; but when the purity of character and nobility of life are inculcated by a heathen monarch, our admiration is mixed with wonder. We can realize how it was that his subjects revered him almost as a god, and that every house contained his likeness. The battle he fought and triumphs he won are told by history. The column commemorative of these victories is now mutilated, but his little book will keep his name in grateful remembrance, for truth is unchangeable.

THE lovers of romance and all who are interested in vivid delineations of human character find delight in the brilliant works of Mr. Dickens. We need not acquaint the public with the characteristics of his writings or commend their merits. We wish at the present time to call attention to the "household edition"¹ of his works, issued by the Harpers in sixteen volumes. The type, though not large enough to make the series too voluminous, is yet clear and legible, the general style is tasteful, and the numerous illustrations will render it attractive to the lovers of the picturesque and the ludicrous.

*The Century: Its Fruits and Its Festival*² is a book which will deeply interest all who visited the Centennial Exhibition, refreshing their memory as to what they saw while there. It will serve also to convey a quite definite idea of the exhibition to those who did not have the privilege of seeing it. It is comparatively brief, considering the vastness of the theme, and many who read its pages will wish that the record were more extensive. The numerous illustrations are elegant and add greatly to the interest and value of the book. The character of the house which issues it is a guarantee that it has no ephemeral character.

OUR juvenile friends who are favored with funds surely have no lack of opportunities to secure entertaining and useful books.

A Happy Summer (American Tract Society, New York) is the title of as charming a book as a child can crave. It contains sixteen chapters, about one third of which are occupied in describing the children's visit to Philadelphia, New York, and Boston. The volume is elegantly illustrated with silhouettes.

Maybee's Stepping Stones (Henry Hoyt) is an excellent book for youth. It contains fifty-two golden texts, one for each week in the year, illustrated by a story well suited to impress the mind with moral and religious truths.

Four Girls at Chataqua (D. Lothrop & Co.) is an interesting account of four gay girls who visited a camp-meeting for pleasure, and were there made the subjects of renewing grace. It is a good Sabbath-school book, and suitable for a gift-book in the family circle. The Randolphs is written by the same author and issued by the same publishers as the foregoing. It has also a religious character, and may be profitably read by our children and youth.

Mother West's Neighbors (American Tract Society, Boston) is another work of a useful character and calculated to interest the readers in doing good among the poor and friendless. It can hardly be called juvenile, but it is worthy to be found in Sabbath-school libraries and Christian homes.

EDITOR'S TABLE.

The Present Number.—The first number of the year is delayed as usual. We did not receive the minutes of New York until the 17th of January. Although proof-sheets of a portion of the Missouri minutes came earlier, we did not receive a full copy of the minutes of that State until the 24th of January. The record of the churches of Colorado has not reached us even now, and we are compelled to use such fragmentary statistics of the Colorado churches as have been furnished us by the American Home Missionary Society. Still, with much labor and heavy expense, we have endeavored to bring down the column of pastoral supply, the ordination of ministers, and their post-office addresses, to the time of our going to press. Hence the value of the number is not diminished by the delay.

We would express our obligations to the secretaries of the various State organizations who have kindly furnished us with copies of their minutes, and who have bestowed an incalculable amount of labor in preparing their statistical tables. We have some occasion to appreciate that kind of labor, and we cheerfully offer our tribute to the patient service of these State officials.

The Date of the Statistical Year.—We have endeavored to induce all the State Associations to adopt Jan. 1, preceding their annual meetings, as the date of their annual statistics, thus making their statistical year correspond with the civil year, and securing uniformity in all the States. As it now is, we have not less than seventeen different dates to the statistics, and cannot give a general summary of the number of churches or members, in the whole country, at any given time.

The demand in the different State Associations is for the latest possible statistics. That this is not the most reasonable demand is seen in the fact that it results in securing only imperfect returns and that it renders it impossible to have uniformity in all the States. It takes no little time to secure full and accurate returns. It is utterly impracticable, unless it be in a State where there are only a few churches, to secure recent statistics and have them full and reliable. In statistics accuracy is more important than the recentness of the date. One object sought by the State Associations is to give fresh interest to their annual meetings; but this interest depends upon the report of the state of religion, which should be brought down to the latest possible date. As to statistical tables, the true interest is in their accuracy, not in whether the date is a few months earlier or later.

It is sometimes said that the great ingathering into our churches is ordinarily in the spring of the year, so that in adopting Jan. 1 as the date of our statistics, we render it impossible to include this ingathering. In reply, we need only state that with Jan. 1 as the date, we include the ingathering of the previous year; hence we have an annual ingathering included as truly as we should have by the adoption of any other date.

By the adoption of Jan. 1 as the date of the statistical year, most of the States can have their statistical tables prepared for their annual meetings; some States can have them in print if this be desirable; and all can be ready to print their minutes soon after the close of their meeting. In New York, for instance, what difference does it make as to the recentness of their statistics whether they gather their facts for Jan. 1, report them in full at their meeting in October, and go to press with them at once, or whether they attempt to get statistics as late as Aug. 31, find that they can give only a partial report at their meeting, and are not able to issue the minutes until January of the following year?

The value of the statistics is essentially impaired by having blanks, with no report, or by making use of the reports of a previous year, or by giving a conjectural number, as is sometimes done. The only possible way of securing fulness and accuracy is the adoption of a date which will allow adequate time for collecting the facts, and the only possible way to secure uniformity in all the States is to adopt a date as early as Jan. 1, preceding all the annual meetings. We commend this subject anew to the consideration of the several State bodies.

The Presbyterian Ministry.—In recording the names of "ministers received from other denominations," we do not include in the list the names of Presbyterian ministers, because this denomination and ours are so near together, and crossing the line between us is so frequent. Indeed, so mingled are the two denominations that it is often difficult to determine to which party some men belong. There were four ministers among the deceased last year who were reported by both denominations, and many more among the living. We have a suggestion to make which may well receive, as it seems to us, the attention of our Presbyterian friends. According to their theory, a man, when he becomes a minister, loses his relation to a local church and enters a peerage in which he is responsible directly only to his ministerial brethren. Such an idea as this, we need hardly say, is foreign from Congregationalism, which holds as sacred and permanent the relation of every professed disciple of Christ to the local church.

When a Presbyterian minister becomes the pastor of a Congregational church, he receives, if he asks for it, a dismission from the Presbytery and a recommendation to a Congregational Association of Ministers. But what becomes of his church relation? As a Congregationalist he must be a member of some local church, but the Presbyterians give him no appropriate credentials which he can use in joining a church. Is it said that he can use his certificate of dismission from the Presbytery? To this there are three objections. 1. It has reference, in form, to ministerial standing, and not, except by implication, to church standing. 2. It is addressed to a ministerial association and not to a church. 3. It cannot be retained by the church as a credential, because it is needed by the bearer in joining the association to which it is addressed. If our Presbyterian friends, as good neighbors, when one of their number leaves them to become a Congregationalist, are disposed to facilitate the change, we think that they will furnish him with such credentials as he needs. This can be done in either of two ways. 1. The Presbyterian church of which he was a member when he joined the Presbytery can give him a letter of church standing addressed to the Congregational church which he wishes to join. Some Presbyterian churches will give such a letter, but others refuse, on the ground that the relation of the individual to them ceased when he joined the Presbytery, and they cannot go back of that fact and resume any responsibility respecting him. 2. The Presbytery can give him two certificates, one of church standing which he may use in joining a Congregational church, and another of ministerial standing which he can use in joining a Congregational association. A pastor of one of the churches in Boston, having tried repeatedly in vain to procure a letter of church membership from the Presbyterian church to which he belonged before joining the Presbytery, was finally voted into the church of which he is pastor without having any credentials; and another Boston pastor, coming still more recently from the Presbyterians, having no credentials as to church standing, joined the church of which he is pastor by making a new profession of his faith. Does not comity between denominations require our Presbyterian friends to provide some way in which to relieve their brethren who cross the line from such inconvenience and embarrassment?

There has never been a time in the experience of the officers of the Union when the financial condition of the community was so embarrassing to them in their work as it is at present. In such an experience as that through which the churches are now passing, there is a strong temptation to make retrenchment begin in our charities. It is doubtless true that a person may find himself compelled to retrench even in his charities; but we think it a sufficiently evident, if not self-evident proposition that retrenchment should not begin here. It is better to curtail our luxuries first, and curtail our charities later, if not last of all.

There is, also, a temptation at such a time as this to discriminate between the objects of charity without deliberate and just consideration. It is often said, "We must take care of our missionaries, personally, and not leave them to suffer." Under this impulse, such a work as that in which the Union is engaged is put aside and neglected. But is it not the wiser course to inquire, How may we most efficiently take care of the missionaries? May it not be best for them, not merely that we should provide them with food and raiment, but also with the means of efficiency in their work? We help the poor most effectually when we place them in a position to help themselves; so we help the missionaries most efficiently when we not only minister directly to their personal wants, but also give them the means of rendering their own churches prosperous and self-sustaining. With this view, will not the friends of missions contribute at once and generously to supply the missionary churches with suitable houses in which they may meet for worship? There is many a missionary ready to say, Give me a house of worship, and I will secure, as the result, a provision for my personal necessities.

The treasury of the Union is empty and over-pledged. Will not the friends of Christ help us meet the demands of the hour?

ANNUAL STATISTICS
OF THE
AMERICAN CONGREGATIONAL
MINISTERS AND CHURCHES,
COLLECTED IN THE YEAR 1876
BY THE
SECRETARIES OF THE SEVERAL STATE ORGANIZATIONS, AND COMPILED FOR THIS PUBLICATION
BY THE EDITOR.

EXPLANATIONS.

The statistical publications of the several State organizations of churches, in 1876, are reproduced in the following tables, with reports obtained by correspondence from sections where none are printed.

We assume no authority whatever as to inserting or omitting churches or names of ministers. The several State Secretaries, representing their own organizations and the missionary societies, are authoritative so far as we are concerned.

Our rules governing their reproduction are :—

1. To make each State list conform strictly to the State boundaries. Churches or ministers reported by the Association of a State other than their own are, therefore, transferred to their proper places; and the summaries are correspondingly corrected.

2. To give the States, and to re-arrange the cities and towns in any State (originally grouped in local organizations), in strictly alphabetical order; but churches in any town are given in the order of their age.

3. To make new tables each year. No church or name of minister is brought from last year. "Last year's report" is always omitted, but the membership or enrolled churches and of their Sabbath Schools not reporting are included in the summary of their State, provided such a church has reported within two years. The list of churches of this year is compared, name by name, with that of last year, and all variations are specifically mentioned with the State summary, so that each church can be traced from year to year.

4. To examine carefully all the tables, with a view to correction or addition by correspondence, especially to correct "pastoral supply" to the latest moment, the several State Secretaries often doing this.

5. To complete the statistics by (1) giving in some form every statistical fact obtainable,—items given by some States, but not by all, being aggregated with the respective State summaries; and (2) putting into finished State and general summaries, with "totals" in all cases, everything capable of it.

As to minor explanations :

When any church is given in brackets, it is one organized since the date of State report, and is not included in the summary, but is inserted for information.

The column of pastoral supply, list of licentiates changed by ordination, and Post Office addresses, are corrected to the time of our going to press; but no such changes are allowed to affect the summaries made at the annual dates in the several States.

Licentiates are not reckoned as ministers. Churches supplied by such, or by ministers of other denominations, are reckoned as vacant; but the number of such churches is given with each State summary.

The relation of ministers to churches is designated thus: installed pastors by "p."; acting or uninstalled pastors are left without any initial letter.

Under "Church Members," "Absent," are included as "Males," "Females," and "Total." "Additions," etc., cover the twelve months next preceding the date given at the head of every page.

Post Office addresses of ministers are not given in the table, but in the general alphabetical "List of Ministers" following the summaries.

Discrepancies in amounts of Benevolent Contributions are explained in "Remarks upon the Annual Statistics," following the Tables of Summaries.

NOTE. — 1. The Foreign Missionaries, 125, are not included in the United States table and total ministers.

2. Most of the churches "not supplied" have regular public worship, but no one minister engaged for continuous service. Many are in the interval between pastorates.

3. Most of the "acting pastors" are practically the same as "pastors," the difference being in the omission of formal installation.

4. The number of ministers "not in pastoral work" includes (with a few authorized exceptions) only those who are members of some Association or Conference. When persons not thus members cease to be in pastoral service, they necessarily cease to be reported.

NOTE. — 1. The "totals" are occasionally given, with no report of the particulars, which, added, make such "totals," and thus the totals exceed the sum of the particulars.

2. "Absent" denotes persons who live at a place other than that of their church relation.

3. The "excommunications" sometimes include, though not with strict accuracy, the number of persons whose names are dropped from church lists on account of long absence.

4. In "Sabbath Schools," Iowa reports the "average attendance" only.

5. The churches making no reports are included in the Summaries, giving a past report of membership (if any) are found in the last preceding report, and sometimes if in the report next previous to that, but no estimate is made of "additions," etc.

NOTE.—1. The distinction is made between contributions for benevolent purposes and moneys raised for any home expenses. For instance, money given to the general Sabbath School cause is benevolent; money expended by a church in supporting its own Sabbath School is a home expenditure, as much as a pastor's salary.

2. The amount of Home Expenditure does not mean all that is spent in a given place, but solely what is raised by a church itself, exclusive of all outside aid.

3. The columns for Home Expenditures are very defective. The item is reported in only about half of the States.

NOTE.—Only a part of the States reported the items for this important table. For those defective, we have examined our Quarterly Record, in which case we have usually assumed the statistical year to end with the month of the annual meetings of the respective State bodies. Of course, this leaves some defects. Lists of new or dropped churches follow the summary of each State.

* Foreign Missionaries are additional to TOTAL MINISTERS.

In the early years included in the above table the totals exceed the sum of the particulars, because in many cases the condition of the churches and the relation of the ministers were not specified.

In this table the total of members is greater than the sum of males and females, and total additions and removals are sometimes greater than the sum of particulars, because totals are sometimes reported alone. "Absent" are included in males, females, and total.

In the above table, the "new" churches are occasionally such as were previously "dropped." The changes in "Benevolent Contributions" are greatly due to more or less full reports. See table next above for number of churches reporting year by year.

"Acting Pastors" were included in "Without Charge," in column of deaths, until 1873.

REMARKS UPON THE ANNUAL STATISTICS.

STATES. — Florida is added to the list of States in which Congregationalism is represented. CHURCHES. — The number given last year, 3,438. Net increase (123 new, less 52 dropped as in Summary IV), 71. Present number, 3,509, as in Summary I.

CHURCH MEMBERS. — Last year, 338,313. Net increase (12,664 increase in thirty-three States, less 319 decrease in eight States, as in Summary IV), 12,345. Present number, 350,658, as in Summary II.

IN SABBATH SCHOOLS. — Last year, 401,838. Net increase (14,808 increase in twenty-five States, less 1,554 decrease in twelve States, as in Summary IV), 13,254. Present number, 415,092, as in Summary III.

BENEVOLENT CONTRIBUTIONS. — Last year, $1,241,014.39. Net increase ($94,243.35 increase in sixteen States, less $37,005.64 decrease in sixteen States, as in Summary IV), $37,237.71. Amount this year, $1,278,252.10, as in Summary III. This is the amount reported by 2,635 churches.

In the Summary of each State an additional statement of Benevolent Contributions has been added the present year, giving the amount contributed to each of the Congregational Societies and to miscellaneous objects. This statement is made up from the reports of the different societies named, with the exception of that of the Congregational Publishing Society, and from the returns given in the State Minutes. The amount of Benevolent Contributions according to this statement is as follows:—

Foreign Missions, credited to the several States, $409,360.69, —adding to this the Donations for Debt, $40,463.60, and Centennial Donations, $7,037.95; total, $456,862.24; Home Missions, $383,632.08; Am. Miss. Association, $108,313.51; Am. Cong. Union, $46,386.11; Am. Coll. and Ed. Society, $63,154.88; Cong. Pub. Society (reported by the several States, $3,451.37, additional reported by the Society, $1,658.63), $5,110.05. Total for denominational work, $1,123,958.87; Miscellaneous (reported by 2,635 churches), $415,183.36. TOTAL, $1,539,142.23. This varies from the amount reported above, because it includes the contributions of a greater number of churches, and because the financial year of the societies does not cover the same period exactly as is embraced in the reports of the different State Minutes. The amount contributed to Home Missions includes $45,922.83 for boxes of clothing acknowledged in The Home Missionary, and $30,606.28 reported in the Massachusetts Minutes, as given to local missions. The total amount given to miscellaneous objects is much larger than the sum here reported.

COMPARISONS. I. As to Churches. — 1. The average increase in the number of churches for nineteen years has been about 63. The gain this year is 71.

2. The increase in membership is greater than in any other year since the record was commenced.

3. The number of additions by profession is larger than in any other year since 1850.

II. As to Ministers. — 1. The number does not increase as fast as the number of churches. The number of pastors remains the same as the previous year; the number of acting pastors has increased.

2. The majority of ordinations without installation waxes worse and worse.

3. The number of deaths of ministers is 64.

III. As to Sabbath Schools. — The number connected with the schools has advanced every year except in 1865.

IV. As to Benevolent Contributions. The amount reported is greater than in any other year except in 1872.

LIST OF CONGREGATIONAL MINISTERS IN THE UNITED STATES.

REPORTED BY THE SEVERAL STATE ORGANIZATIONS.

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL, in 1871, unanimously adopted the following:—

"Resolved, That all ministers in our denomination ought to be in orderly connection with some ministerial or ecclesiastical organization, which shall be able to certify to their regular standing in the ministry."

The following appears among the BY-LAWS:—

"The Council approves of an annual compilation of the statistics of the churches, and of a list of such ministers as are reported by the several State organizations."

The following list, in conformity to the above, is made up from the alphabetical lists printed by the State Associations and Conferences (not from the preceding tables), sometimes changed by letters from the Secretaries, with the names of persons regularly ordained since the issue of the State Minutes, or under commission from the American Home Missionary Society or the American Missionary Association. Any omissions (unless by accident) are due to the fact that no organization reported the names of the omitted.

Licentiates are not included in this list, nor are ministers of other denominations, unless they are also members of some Congregational organization, although they may be temporarily supplying our churches. A list of Licentiates follows this.

Names without post-office address are followed by the name of the State reporting them, in parenthesis.

Letters for foreign missionaries are forwarded by the respective Boards. See Missionary Herald and American Missionary for particular directions.

LIST OF LICENTIATES REPORTED.

As to the following list, note, — 1. It does not agree in number with Summary I, because all ordained since the lists were reported are here dropped. 2. The post-office addresses are often delusive, the place being that of temporary service only. 3. Names followed by State only are of persons approbated in the State mentioned, no residence being reported. 4. The list is incomplete, because some States make no full report of Licentiates.
